* Exclusive of upwards of 9 millions already given in Hungary and Italy.

† Exclusive of Austria and Prussia.

The above table is formed chiefly from a pamphlet, entitled "Remarks on the Consumption of Public Wealth by the Clergy," published in London in 1822. Some of the statements are of doubtful accuracy. According to the Edinburgh Review for June 1822, instead of one half of the population of England, or 6 millions, as above stated, two thirds, or 9 millions, belong to the established church. According to the New Edinburgh Encyclopedia, (vol. VIII, p. 623,) the annual income of the clergy of the church of England of all ranks, is supposed to amount to only about £3,000,000; and the average annual income of the parochial clergy does not exceed £100. According to Hassel and others, the Protestants in France are more numerous than above stated. See France.

The ecclesiastical establishment of Ireland is the most wealthy and most burdensome to the inhabitants of any in Europe. The Catholics of that country, according to Beaufort, Newenham, and Wakefield, amount to at least five sixths of the inhabitants. The members of the established church, according to Wakefield, constitute only about a twentieth part; and according to the Edinburgh Review, cannot at most exceed 500,000; yet there are 22 Protestant archbishops and bishops, whose aggregate annual revenue is estimated at £185,700, equal to $825,333, making the average annual income of each prelate $37,515.

In the Catholic countries of Europe the wealth of the ecclesiastical establishments, and the number of ecclesiastics have been greatly diminished since the French revolution. In 1787, the clergy of France formed about one 52d part of the population; and their annual income was estimated at £7,400,000. The real property belonging to the clergy of Spain before the revolution has been estimated at £186,500,000, exclusive of tithes and other taxes.—The following statement exhibits the number of ecclesiastics in the two countries before the revolution.

In addition to the societies above enumerated, are the Society (in London) for promoting Christian Knowledge, instituted in 1698; the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, incorporated in 1709; the Royal Danish Mission College; the Edinburgh Jews' Society; the Glasgow Missionary Society; the Netherlands Missionary society; the American United Foreign Missionary Society, and the South African Missionary Society. These support a few missionaries. In most cases ordained ministers only are included in the table as missionaries. There are, in addition, many assistant missionaries and schoolmasters.

Macao, s-p. China, in Quang-tong. Lon. 113. 35. E. Lat. 22. 13. N. This town is built on a peninsula, or rather on a small island, which has an area of 106 square miles, and contains 33,800 inhabitants. The Portuguese fortified the place, surrounded it with strong walls, and in a manner became masters of it. Macao has a Portuguese governor, and a Chinese mandarin; and the English and other nations have factories here. The houses are of stone built after the European manner, but they are low, and make little show. The city is defended by three forts, built upon eminences; its works are good and well planted with artillery. It was formerly a place of the greatest importance, being the centre of the trade of the Portuguese in the eastern part of Asia. Since the decline of the Portuguese trade, the town has sunk into a place of comparatively little importance.

Maceda, t. Spain, in Galicia; 5 SE. Santiago.

Macedonia, or Macedon, pr. Eu. Turkey, bounded N. by Servia, E. by Rumania, S. by Thessaly and the Archipelago, and W. by Albania. Sq. m. about 15,780. Pop. 700,000. The figure of it is very irregular, but the situation advantageous, and the air clear, sharp, and wholesome. The soil is, for the most part, fertile, and the maritime coasts in particular abound in corn, wine, oil, cotton, tobacco, &c. But the wealth of the country at large lies in the flocks of sheep, whose wool is in great request, and is annually exported to the value of about 1,500,000*l*. In the inland parts are several uninhabited wastes. It had mines formerly of almost all kinds of metal, but particularly of gold, and sufficiency of timber. The many fine bays in this country are a great convenience to trade. Chief towns, Salonica and Serrae.

Maceira, or Midjare, (an. Scrapis,) isl. in the Arabian Sea, near the coast, about 50 m. in length, and from 3 to 8 broad. It is barren and uninhabited, with dangerous shoals on SW. coast, which extends 90 miles along the shore, and so far into the sea, that the land cannot be seen before the unskilful pilot feels the rocks. Lon. 57. 35. E. Lat. 20. 48. N.

Maceira, (Little,) isl. in the Arabian Sea, 16 miles long, and 3 broad; 10 W. Maceira.

Macer, r. Africa, in Tripoli, which runs into the Mediterranean, 20 E. Zebeda.

Macerata, t. Naples, in Lavora, about 3 m. from Capua, in the road to Naples.

The village at the East Falls is at the head of the tide, 2 m. above the junction of the two branches, and contains various mills. This branch has a width of 35 rods to the falls.—The village at the West Falls, contains the county buildings, consisting of a court house, a jail, and a handsome dwelling house ; and has also various mills. The western branch, though narrow, is capable of admitting vessels of 250 tons, to within 50 rods of the mills.

Machias is a thriving town, and has considerable trade. The exports which consist of boards, joist, shingles, clapboards, laths, spars, sawed and hewed timber, and fish, amount annually to upwards of 100,000 dollars. There are 26 saw-mills, which cut, on an average, upwards of 10,000,000 feet of boards in a year. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1816, amounted to 1,128 tons. An academy is about to go into operation here.

Madagascar, isl. Africa, on the eastern coast, separated from the continent by the channel of Mozambique, which is about 270 miles across. Lon. 44. to 51. E. Lat. 12. 2. to 25. 40. S; about 900 miles long, and from 120 to 300 broad. Sq. m. about 220,000. Pop. uncertain, estimated by Flacourt at 1,600,000; by Rondoux at 3,000,000; by Rochon at 4,000,000.

It is one of the largest islands in the world, and is remarkable for its fertility. The surface is greatly diversified, being intersected throughout its whole length by a chain of lofty mountains, the highest summits of which are said to be about 11,000 feet above the sea. The scenery of these mountains is often grand and picturesque. The forests abound in beautiful trees, as palms, ebony, wood for dyeing, bamboos of enormous size, orange and lemon trees. The botany of the island is interesting; iron mines abound in various parts; other minerals are found: but the mineralogy of the island has been but little explored. The country is well watered by numerous streams mostly small, which descend from the mountains. In this genial climate they produce a luxuriant fertility. Rice is the staple food of the inhabitants. Other productions are potatoes, sugar, silk, &c. The sheep produce fine wool. The cocoa nut, banana, &c. flourish.

The inhabitants are of a variety of races, much intermingled with each other; but it is still possible to discover the race of real negroes, having flat features and woolly hair. The leading classes, however, are of various shades of white and olive. Some of these claim their descent from the Arabs, others from the Jews. The former profess the Mahometan religion. The Madagasses, who are not negroes, are of a complexion similar to that of the Indians. They are a thoughtless, gay, voluptuous people, impatient of labour and of every thing that requires attention. Rochon enumerates 14 provinces or districts, occupied by different petty tribes.—Some ineffectual attempts have been heretofore made by Europeans to form settlements here. The London Missionary society has sent missionaries to the island, and it has been annexed to the British empire as a dependency of Mauritius.

Madeira, isl. off the western coast of Africa, belonging to Portugal. Lon. 17. W. Lat. 32. 30. N. Sq. m. according to Cannabich 600; Edinburgh Gazetteer 1,100. Pop. in 1768, 63,913; estimated by Barrow at 90,000. The body of the people are of Portuguese descent, negro slavery not being permitted. The peasants are very poor, rude, and ignorant; the hardest labour is performed by females. The religion is Catholic.

The island consists of a collection of mountains, the most elevated of which is 5,068 feet high. The lower slopes are covered with vines, the loftier summits with forests of pine and chestnut. A great part of the sides of the hills consists of abrupt precipitous rocks, supposed to be of volcanic formation. Most of the rocks along the coast are composed of a white lava. The productions, besides wine, are wheat, rye, sugar, coffee, maize, kidney beans, arrow root, pine apples, &c. The great production is wine of well known excellence. The quantity annually exported is differently stated from 15 to 40,000 pipes, one half of which goes to the British settlements in the East and West Indies. The best vines grow on the south side of the island. There are several varieties of wines; the best is called London particular, the 2d London market, the 3d suited to the India market, the 4th for the New-York market, the 5th called cargo. London particular has been at the following rates; in 1793 at 35*l.* per pipe; in 1806 at 44*l.*; and in 1811 at 54*l.* Adjacent to Madeira is the small island Porto Santo.

Madeira, or Madera, r. which rises in the government of Charcas, S. A. near Cochabamba, in Lat. 18. S. first called Conderillo. Some other small rivers joining it, it changes its name to Parapite. Its course hitherto is SE. till it enters a lake situated in Lat. 19. 50. S., after which it takes a N. direction, with the name of St. Miguel, and afterwards Sara; about Lat. 14. S. it is called Mamore; and in Lat. 10. S. leaves Peru, and enters Brazil, from which time it is called Madeira, till it empties itself into the river of the Amazons, in Lon. 60. 40. W. Lat. 3. 15. S.; the whole course being about 1,500 miles.

Madras Presidency. The territories subject to Fort George, or Madras, comprehend nearly the whole of India south of the river This-trah, and also a large province in the Deccan called the Northern Circars. Within these boundaries are 3 native princes, the rajahs of Mysore, Travancore, and Cochin, who collect the revenue and exercise a certain degree of authority, but with respect to external politics, are entirely dependent on the British government. The rest of the country is under the immediate jurisdiction of the governor and council at Madras. It is divided into the following districts, Arcot, Bellary, Canara, Chingleput, Chittore, Coimbatore, Combaconum, Cuddapa, Ganjam, Guntoor, Madras, Madura, Malabar North, Malabar South, Masulipatam, Nellore, Rajahmundry, Salem, Seringapatam, Tanjore, Tinnevelly, Trichinopoly, Verdachellum, and Vizagapatam, over each of which there is a European judge and collector. Pop. estimated at 12,000,000. Geographical sq. m. 125,000.

Madras, called by the natives Chennapatam, city & celebrated fortress, Hind. Carnatic, capital of the presidency of Madras, Lon. 80. 25. E. Lat. 13. 5. N. Pop. in 1794, estimated at 300,000; supposed to have increased since. It was founded in 1640, on a small territory 5 miles long, and 1 broad. Its position is very unfortunate, being situated on a flat sandy shore, where the surf runs with extreme violence, and is surrounded by salt water creeks, or rivers, which prevents the introduction of a stream of fresh water into the town. The soil in the vicinity is very poor. It was taken by the French in 1744, and restored to the British in 1749, since which it has been gradually increased and improved, and it is now one of the strongest fortresses in India. All the offices of government, and courts of justice are in the fort, which is called Fort St. George; but the governor and all the principal inhabitants have houses at a short distance in the country where they mostly reside. The nabob of the Carnatic has also a palace called Chepauk, situated on the Choultry plain, a short distance from the esplanade.

The native, or black town, is situated about a mile to the north of the fort. It is surrounded with fortifications sufficient to repel a sudden attack. It has some good streets and bazars, but the houses are very irregular; some of them are large brick buildings with flat roofs; but the greater part are built of mud, with tiled roofs.

Madras carries on a considerable trade, not only with Europe, but with China, Ceylon, Pegu, the isle of France, New Holland, &c.—The government is subordinate, in political matters, to the supreme government of Bengal, but carries on all the other departments of a regular state. It consists of a governor and 3 members of council. The salary of the supreme judge is 6,000*l.* per annum, of the puisne judges 5,000*l.* each. A college has lately been established here for instructing the junior servants in the native language. Several missionaries are supported here by the Church, London, and Methodist missionary societies. The climate is very hot, but not esteemed unhealthy. The medium heat of the year is stated at 80°9; the medium of January at 75°1; of June 85°9.

Madrid, (New), co. Missouri. Pop. 2,296. Chief town, Winchester.

Madrid, (New), p-t. New Madrid co. Missouri, on W. side of the river Mississippi, 75 miles below the mouth of the Ohio; 148 S. St. Louis, W. 958. Lon. 89. 30. W. Lat. 36. 36. N. This town was originally laid out on an extensive plan, and with the expectation of its becoming a great city, but is only a small decayed village. It is built on ground somewhat higher than the ordinary bank of the Mississippi, but is, however, exposed to the ravages of the river, and is also environed both above and below with stagnant muddy creeks. The surrounding country is singularly fertile and productive.

Madrid, city & capital of Spain, in New Castile, and in a province of the same name, on the Manzanares, near the centre of the kingdom, about 200 miles from the sea; 650 SSW. Paris, 850 W. by S. Rome. Lon. 3. 38. W. Lat. 40. 25. N. Pop. in 1797, 167,607. H. 7,398. Pop. stated in 1820, at nearly 200,000. It is situated in a large plain, on several eminences, and is 2,200 feet above the level of the sea, being the most elevated capital in Europe. Seen at a distance, it presents nothing that announces a great city, and the environs being destitute of wood, and even of vines, while most of the villages are in hollows, the prospect is uncommonly dreary. On drawing near the prospect is more cheerful.

The city is of an oblong form, about 6 miles in circuit, surrounded by a high earthen wall, but has no ditch, or any other means of defence. The old streets are narrow and crooked, but many others are wide, straight, and handsome. They are paved, kept clean, and lighted. The city has 15 gates, 42 squares mostly small, 506 streets, 77 churches, 75 convents, 8 colleges, and 18 hospitals, 65 public edifices, 17 fountains, and several promenades. The private houses are uniform, generally low, with grated windows, and have little striking in their exterior. The churches are less magnificent than in several other cities in Spain. There are 2 palaces on a large scale, the Palacio Real at the western extremity, and the Buen Retiro at the eastern. The Palacio Real is of a square form, extending each way 404 feet, 86 feet high; the inclosed court 120 feet square. It is strongly built, the exterior elegantly ornamented, and it contains a collection of paintings of the best masters of Flanders, Italy, and Spain. The royal library contains about 130,000 volumes, and 2,000 MSS. The great school of Madrid has 16 masters who teach the various arts and sciences. There is another seminary on an equally extensive plan for the sons of the nobility and gentry. There are academies for the study of the several fine arts; a botanic garden, and a variety of charitable institutions. In the vicinity are several royal residences. Before the French revolution there was only one gazette published in Spain. In 1820 there were 25 newspapers and periodical journals published in this city.—Natives, Lopez de la Vega, Quevedo Velegas, and Erzilla.

It is one of the strongest fortresses in Germany, being surrounded by a number of out-works, and having a citadel on an island in the river, with an arsenal and store houses. It is situated in a very beautiful, though flat country, and its environs are very pleasant. It consists of 5 parts, has been rebuilt since 1631, and is well constructed.

The most remarkable public buildings are the royal exchequer, the ducal palace, the regency house, the government house, the new and old arsenals, the cathedral, &c. It contains 13 chh., 10 Luth., 2 Ref., & 1 Cath. ; 5 hospitals ; 2 large schools or gymnasia, one with 11, the other with 9 teachers, several public libraries, &c. Of its squares the principal is the cathedral square. At a short distance are the salt works of Schoenebeck, producing about 30,000 tons annually. The town has extensive breweries and distilleries, and manufactures of woollen, linen, stockings, hats, leather, tobacco, soap, and wax. The trade is extensive, and is much benefited by the navigation of the Elbe. In the citadel are shewn the cells where baron Trenck and La Fayette were confined.—Natives, Guerick, Schulz, and Sack.

Magnisa, (an. Magnesia ad Sipylum,) t. Natolia, near the Sarabat; 20 NNE. Smyrna. Lon. 27. 18. E. Lat. 38. 44. N. Parsons and Fisk were informed when at this place, in 1820, that it contained 33 mosques, 2 synagogues, 1 Greek and 2 Armenian chh.; 800 Greek houses, 3 or 400 Armenian, 100 or 150 Jewish. The streets are wide, the mosques painted white, and the houses better than in most other towns in this part of Natolia. It is situated at the foot of the ancient Mount Sipylus, whose top is always covered with snow. This town was by the Persian monarch given to Themistocles to find him bread. Under John Ducas, it was made the capital of the Greek empire. The greatest ornament of the ancient town was a temple of Diana, called Leucophryene, or the

The government of Magdeburg is one of the finest parts of the Prussian monarchy. The surface is level, the soil fertile ; grain is raised for exportation. The manufactures consist of woollens, linen, some silk, &c.

Magdeburg, (an. Magdeburgum Parthenopolis,) city, Pru. in Saxony, capital of a government, formerly of a duchy, on both sides of the Elbe ; 60 NNW. Leipzig, 75 WSW. Berlin, 125 SSE. Hamburg. Lon. 11. 39. E. Lat. 52. 8. N. Pop. in 1815, 32,867 ; Lutherans 29,243 ; Reformed 2,036 ; Catholics 1,359 ; Jews 234. H. 2,327. Pop. in 1817, including the military 35,448. It is one of the strongest fortresses in Germany, being surrounded by a number of out-works, and having a citadel on an island in the river, with an arsenal and store houses. It is situated in a very beautiful, though flat country, and its environs are very pleasant. It consists of 5 parts, has been rebuilt since 1631, and is well constructed.

The most remarkable public buildings are the royal exchequer, the ducal palace, the regency house, the government house, the new and old arsenals, the cathedral, &c. It contains 13 chh., 10 Luth., 2 Ref., & 1 Cath. ; 5 hospitals ; 2 large schools or gymnasia, one with 11, the other with 9 teachers, several public libraries, &c. Of its squares the principal is the cathedral square. At a short distance are the salt works of Schoenebeck, producing about 30,000 tons annually. The town has extensive breweries and distilleries, and manufactures of woollen, linen, stockings, hats, leather, tobacco, soap, and wax. The trade is extensive, and is much benefited by the navigation of the Elbe. In the citadel are shewn the cells where baron Trenck and La Fayette were confined.—Natives, Guerick, Schulz, and Sack.

Mahratta Territory, extensive country, Hind., which till recently extended across the peninsula of India, and is possessed by the Peshwa, whose capital is Poonah, Nagpore rajah, Scindia, Holcar, Guicowar, and a few other inferior chiefs. Pop. estimated at 6,000,000. Geographical sq. m. 75,000.

But little is known respecting the history of the Mahrattas till the beginning of the 17th century. Their original territory is said to have been Candeish. The first person that raised this nation from obscurity was Sevajee, born about 1626. His grandson Sahoo Rajah whose reign commenced about 1689, and continued nearly 50 years, extended his dominions from sea to sea, and from the province of Agra to Cape Comorin. He was succeeded by his son Ram Rajah, a weak prince, who was confined by his two chief officers, who divided the empire between them, one fixing his residence at Poonah, the other at Nagpore. Within a few years the descendant of Ram Rajah has been placed on the throne at Poonah.

The Mahrattas are Hindoos, but except the Brahmins, not very scrupulous of what they eat. Their whole army, till lately, was composed of cavalry; never formidable as a regular force, but depending more on the celerity of their motions, and sudden incursions, than in boldly meeting their enemy: they marched at the rate of 50 miles a day. The common people are semi-barbarous, but the Brahmins are polished and insidious; many of them are merchants.

Washington	13	12,744	Machias
York	23	46,283	York and Alfred
Total	243	298,335

Towns. Portland is the chief town. The other most considerable towns, excepting the county towns exhibited in the preceding table, are Bath, Hallowell, Kennebunk, Saco, Gardiner, Waterville, Belfast, Frankfort, Bucksport, Lubec, Eastport, Brunswick, South Berwick, and Fryeburg.

Education. There is a college at Brunswick, literary and theological seminaries at Waterville and Bangor, and about 20 academies in the state. Common schools are supported by law.

Religion. The Congregationalists had, in 1817, 115 chh., the Baptists 112 chh., and the Quakers 32 meetings. The Methodist are numerous, and there are a few Episcopalians, and a few of some other denominations.

Rivers, bays, and lakes. The principal rivers are the Penobscot, Kennebeck, Androscoggin, Saco, St. Croix, and St. Johns. The principal bays are Casco, Penobscot, Frenchman's, Englishman's, Machias, and Passamaquoddy. The most noted lakes are Moosehead, Umbagog, Sebago, Schoodic, and several others farther in the interior.

Face of the country. Maine is rather an elevated country, having generally a diversified surface. A tract commencing on the west side of the district, east of the White Mountains in N. H., and holding a northeast direction as far as the heads of the Aroostic, about 160 m. in length, and 60 in its greatest breadth, is mountainous. Katahdin mountain is the most elevated summit in this range. There is also a small mountainous tract in the northern extremity. The remainder of the state may be considered, generally, as a moderately hilly country.

Soil and productions. The tract of country along the sea coast from 10 to 20 miles wide embraces all the varieties of sandy, gravelly, clayey, and loamy soils, frequently interspersed at short distances ; seldom very rich, in many places tolerably fertile, but generally poor. Of this section Indian corn, rye, barley, grass, &c. are the principal productions. In the tract lying north of this, and extending 50 miles from the sea in the western, 80 in the central, and 90 in the eastern part, the same kinds of soil are found, but they are less frequently diversified, and generally more fertile. The surface rises into large swells of generally good soil, between which, on the margin of the streams, are frequently rich intervals, and in other places sandy or gravelly pine plains, or spruce and cedar swamps. Of this section the principal productions are grass, Indian corn, wheat, barley, rye, flax, &c. The country beyond the limits above specified, is but little settled. It exhibits great diversities in the appearance of its soil, growth of timber, and also in climate. The land on the Kennebeck, and between this river and the Penobscot, is accounted the best in the state. It is well adapted to the various purposes of agriculture, and as a grazing country, it is one of the finest in New England.

Climate. Though the climate of Maine is subject to great extremes of heat and cold, yet the air in all parts of the country is pure and salubrious. The summers in most parts are favourable to the growth of all the vegetable productions of the northern states. In some parts, however, Indian corn and some other plants of a more tender kind, are frequently injured, and sometimes destroyed, by frosts late in the spring and early in the autumn. The cold of winter is severe yet the serenity of the sky, and the invigorating influence of the atmosphere, during the same season, make amends, in some degree, for the severity of the weather.

Commerce. Maine enjoys great facilities for commerce. The coast is indented with bays, abounding in excellent harbours. All the settled parts of the country lie near a market, and the produce of the farmer is readily exchanged for money, at a good price. The principal article of export is timber. Vast quantities of boards, shingles, clapboards, masts, spars, &c. are transported to the neighbouring states, to the West Indies, and to Europe. Much of the firewood consumed in Boston, Salem, &c. is brought from Maine. Dried fish and pickled salmon are considerable articles of export. Beef, pork, butter, pot and pearl ashes, and some grain are also among the exports. Great quantities of lime are annually exported from Thomastown.

Limestone and bog iron ore abound in many places.

Manufactures. The principal manufactures consist of cotton and woollen cloths, hats, shoes, boots, leather, iron, nails, distilled spirits, and cordage.

Maine, see Mayne.

Maine, or Mayne, (an. Mænus,) r. Ger. which rises on the confines of Bohemia. It is formed of two streams, the one called the Weis, or White, the other Roth, or Red; both these join near Culmbach. It afterwards passes by or near to Lichtenfels, Bamberg, Zeil, Hasfurt, Maynberg, Schweinfurt, Schwarzbach, Dettelbach, Kitzingen, Ochsenfurt, Sommershausen, Wurzburg, Carolstadt, Gemunden, Lohr, Wertheim, Freudenberg, Miltenburg, Aschaffenburg, Selingenstadt, Hanau, Offenbach, Frankfurt, Höchst, &c., and joins the Rhine near Mentz. It affords a navigation as far as Bamberg. Length, about 300 miles.

Maine, (Lower,) circle, Bav. comprising the late grand duchy of Wurzburg, the principality of Fulda, the district of Aschaffenburg, and part of the grand duchies of Hesse and Fulda. It adjoins Baden, Hesse Cassel, and Hesse Darmstadt. The surface except about Wurzburg, is hilly. Pop. 422,366; mostly Catholics. Sq. m. 3,017. Chief town, Wurzburg.

Maine, (Upper,) circle, Bav., comprising the late principalities of Bamberg and Upper Bayreuth, and the northern part of the Upper Palatinate; adjoining Saxony and Bohemia; generally hilly; the soil not fertile, except around Bamberg. Pop. 433,229. Sq. m. 3,452. Chief towns, Bayreuth and Bamberg.

Maine & Tauber, circle, Baden, comprehending the NE. corner. Pop. 95,382. Chief town, Wertheim.

Pop. in 1797, 140,699; 3,700 priests, monks, and nuns. Towns, Palma, the capital, Pollenza, Soler, St. Martial, Andraccio, Bulonia, and Alcudia.

It is almost surrounded by a chain of mountains, a branch of which penetrates towards the centre. The climate is generally temperate, the heat of summer being moderated by sea breezes;

but it is somewhat subject to violent storms. The soil is fertile, but agriculture is very backward. Vines, orange trees, olive trees, carob trees, plane trees, &c. flourish. The principal exports consist of olive oil, wine, spirits, oranges, lemons, almonds, cheese, capers, and beans.—Corn is not raised in sufficient quantity to supply the inhabitants. Game is abundant; venomous serpents hardly known; horned cattle small; hogs and sheep large. Coral is obtained in the bay of Alcudia. The inhabitants are said to resemble the Catalonians. People of rank speak Spanish; the common people a medley of Limosin, Greek, Latin, Spanish, and Arabic.

Malabar, pr. Hind. on the western coast, between 10 & 13 deg. N. Lat. bounded N. by Canara, E. by the Western Gauts, S. by Cochin, and W. by the sea ; 155 miles long, 35, on an average, broad. The principal towns are Calicut, Tellicherry, and Cananore. The province is under the government of Madras, and is divided into two collectorships. The revenue, in 1817, amounted 250,000*l*. The part bordering on the sea is level, and the soil poor ; the other part is hilly ; and the soil in the valleys & of some of the hills, is very fertile, abounding in timber, sandal wood, cocoa nuts, coir, and black pepper. Vasco de Gama landed at Calicut in 1498. Previous to this there were several colonies of oriental Christians, Jews, and Mahometans, established in Malabar ; each have greatly increased, though the bulk of the inhabitants are still Hindoos. The descendants of the Portuguese, and converts to the Roman Catholic religion, are numerous, but are not on good terms with the oriental or Nestorian christians.—The name Malabar is frequently applied to the western coast of Hindoostan from Cape Comorin to about 100 m. S. Goa, and also the western coast indefinitely ; the opposite or eastern coast, being styled Coromandel.

Malacca, or Malaya, country of India beyond the Ganges, consisting of a large peninsula, connected with Siam by the Isthmus of Kraw, which is about 75 miles broad. In all other places it is surrounded by the sea. It is about 775 miles long, and 120, on an average, broad. It is traversed throughout by a chain of lofty mountains, and is covered with extensive forests & marshes, so that it is difficult to penetrate into the interior. The fruits are excellent and plentiful, but grain is not produced in sufficient quantity to supply the inhabitants. Its political condition alternates between a dependence upon Siam, and a division into a number of petty independent states. The principal divisions are Kraw, Queda, Pera, Salengore, Malacca Proper, Rumbo, Johore, Tringano, Packanga, and Patany. The Malays are Mahometans ; much addicted to piracy ; in their disposition daring, restless, ferocious, and vindictive ; to enemies remorseless, to friends capricious, and to strangers treacherous. Gaming is common among them. Their language, however, is distinguished above all others in the east for its softness and smoothness. The inhabitants of the interior are considered a distinct race, conceived to be the original inhabitants.

Malacca, s-p. & capital of the above country, on the western coast, and on the straits of Malacca. Lon. 102. 12. E. Lat. 2. 14. N. Pop. stated some years since at 12,000. Many of the houses are well built of stone, and there are several spacious and handsome streets. The surrounding country is fertile and pleasant.—There is a good roadstead about 1 1-2 m. distant from the town, but the entrance of the river by boats is difficult. The exports are tin, sago, pepper, canes, elephants' teeth, and gold dust.— This place was once possessed by the Portuguese, afterwards by the Dutch, till 1795, when it was subjected by a British force, and afterwards dismantled. Since the formation of the settlement at Pulo Pinang, its commercial importance is almost entirely lost.

Malacca, (Straits of,) narrow sea between the island of Sumatra and the country of Malacca, extending from the equinoctial line, to Lat. 5. N.

Malaga, (an. Malacha,) city & s-p. Spain, in Grenada, on the coast of the Mediterranean; 51 SE. Grenada, 80 ESE. Seville, 203 S. by W. Madrid. Lon. 4. 25. W. Lat. 36. 43. N. Pop. in 1805, 52,376. H. 5,500. It is situated at the head of a deep bay, with a large plain to the north, while on the east and west it is sheltered by lofty mountains. The port is capable of containing about 400 vessels, and is one of the best artificial harbours in the world, and affords sufficient depth of water for ships of the line to lie close to the pier.

The streets, as in other Moorish towns, are very narrow, the houses large, the public buildings much obscured by private houses, and the city does not contain a good square. The most conspicuous buildings are the cathedral and custom house. The commerce is extensive. The exports consist chiefly of the produce of the fertile vicinity; viz. wine, figs, almonds, oranges, lemons, olives, sumack, juniper berries, wax, honey, raisins, &c. The vineyards on the surrounding hills produce annually 2, or 3,000 pipes of wine, about half of which is exported.

Majorca, isl. in the Mediterranean, east of Spain, the largest of the 3 Balearic isles; about 100 miles from the coast of Spain; 150 from Algiers; 40 miles long, and nearly as broad. Sq. m. 1,410. Pop. in 1797, 140,699; 3,700 priests, monks, and nuns. Towns, Palma, the capital, Pollenza, Soler, St. Martial, Andracio, Bulonia, and Alcudia.

It is almost surrounded by a chain of mountains, a branch of which penetrates towards the centre. The climate is generally temperate, the heat of summer being moderated by sea breezes;

but it is somewhat subject to violent storms. The soil is fertile, but agriculture is very backward. Vines, orange trees, olive trees, carob trees, plane trees, &c. flourish. The principal exports consist of olive oil, wine, spirits, oranges, lemons, almonds, cheese, capers, and beans.—Corn is not raised in sufficient quantity to supply the inhabitants. Game is abundant; venomous serpents hardly known; horned cattle small; hogs and sheep large. Coral is obtained in the bay of Alcudia. The inhabitants are said to resemble the Catalonians. People of rank speak Spanish; the common people a medley of Limosin, Greek, Latin, Spanish, and Arabic.

Malabar, pr. Hind. on the western coast, between 10 & 13 deg. N. Lat. bounded N. by Canara, E. by the Western Gauts, S. by Cochin, and W. by the sea; 155 miles long, 35, on an average, broad. The principal towns are Calicut, Tellicherry, and Cananore. The province is under the government of Madras, and is divided into two collectorships. The revenue, in 1817, amounted 250,000/. The part bordering on the sea is level, and the soil poor; the other part is hilly; and the soil in the valleys & of some of the hills, is very fertile, abounding in timber, sandal wood, cocoa nuts, coir, and black pepper. Vasco de Gama landed at Calicut in 1498. Previous to this there were several colonies of oriental Christians, Jews, and Mahometans, established in Malabar; each have greatly increased, though the bulk of the inhabitants are still Hindoos. The descendants of the Portuguese, and converts to the Roman Catholic religion, are numerous, but are not on good terms with the oriental or Nestorian christians.—The name Malabar is frequently applied to the western coast of Hindoostan from Cape Comorin to about 100 m. S. Goa, and also the western coast indefinitely; the opposite or eastern coast, being styled Coromandel.

Malacca, or Malaya, country of India beyond the Ganges, consisting of a large peninsula, connected with Siam by the Isthmus of Kraw, which is about 75 miles broad. In all other places it is surrounded by the sea. It is about 775 miles long, and 120, on an average, broad. It is traversed throughout by a chain of lofty mountains, and is covered with extensive forests & marshes, so that it is difficult to penetrate into the interior. The fruits are excellent and plentiful, but grain is not produced in sufficient quantity to supply the inhabitants. Its political condition alternates between a dependence upon Siam, and a division into a number of petty independent states. The principal divisions are Kraw, Queda, Pera, Salengore, Malacca Proper, Rumbo, Johore, Tringano, Packanga, and Patany. The Malays are Mahometans; much addicted to piracy; in their disposition daring, restless, ferocious, and vindictive; to enemies remorseless, to friends capricious, and to strangers treacherous. Gaming is common among them. Their language, however, is distinguished above all others in the east for its softness and smoothness. The inhabitants of the interior are considered a distinct race, conceived to be the original inhabitants.

Malacca, s-p. & capital of the above country, on the western coast, and on the straits of Malacca. Lon. 102. 12. E. Lat. 2. 14. N. Pop. stated some years since at 12,000. Many of the houses are well built of stone, and there are several spacious and handsome streets. The surrounding country is fertile and pleasant.—There is a good roadstead about 1 1-2 m. distant from the town, but the entrance of the river by boats is difficult. The exports are tin, sago, pepper, canes, elephants' teeth, and gold dust.— This place was once possessed by the Portuguese, afterwards by the Dutch, till 1795, when it was subjected by a British force, and afterwards dismantled. Since the formation of the settlement at Pulo Pinang, its commercial importance is almost entirely lost.

Malaga, (an. Malacha), city & s-p. Spain, in Grenada, on the coast of the Mediterranean; 51 SE. Grenada, 80 ESE. Seville, 203 S. by W. Madrid. Lon. 4. 25. W. Lat. 36. 43. N. Pop. in 1805, 52,376. H. 5,500. It is situated at the head of a deep bay, with a large plain to the north, while on the east and west it is sheltered by lofty mountains. The port is capable of containing about 400 vessels, and is one of the best artificial harbours in the world, and affords sufficient depth of water for ships of the line to lie close to the pier.

The streets, as in other Moorish towns, are very narrow, the houses large, the public buildings much obscured by private houses, and the city does not contain a good square. The most conspicuous buildings are the cathedral and custom house. The commerce is extensive. The exports consist chiefly of the produce of the fertile vicinity; viz. wine, figs, almonds, oranges, lemons, olives, sumack, juniper berries, wax, honey, raisins, &c. The vineyards on the surrounding hills produce annually 2, or 3,000 pipes of wine, about half of which is exported.

Maldivé Islands, cluster of islands in the Indian sea, situated about 270 miles SW. of Cape Comorin. The number is said to amount to 1,000, or more, but they are for the most part small and uninhabited. The greatest breadth of the chain is from 20 to 24 leagues. The inhabitants appear to be a mixture of Arabs and Indians of Malabar. They supply vessels with sails and cordage, cocoa-nuts, oil, and honey, dry fish, tortoise-shell, and especially cowries. They are divided into 17 attollons, or provinces, and are governed by one king ; but each attollon has its particular governor, who rules with great oppressor. The subjects are miserably poor ; and none dare wear any clothing above the waist, except a turban, without a particular license. They have only 4 ports, in which their few articles of commerce are collected. They lie in Lon. 73. 30. to 75. 45. E. and Lat. 3. 30. to 7. 5. N.

The chief towns are La Valetta, the capital, Civita Vecchia, Citta Vittoriosa, Senglea, Bormola, Citta Nuovo Cottonera, and Malta. The only good harbours are those of Marza and Marza Murjet.

The coast is, in general, steep and rugged; there are a number of springs of fresh water, but no rivers. The general practice here, as in Holland, is to use rain water preserved in cisterns. The soil is formed of a reddish loamy mould, lying on a basis of rock, and seldom exceeding from 10 to 16 inches in depth. Every spot is cultivated with the greatest care; and soil, when deficient, is supplied in ships loads from Sicily. The fields are surrounded with very small inclosures of stone, of very irregular form, to prevent the earth from being washed away by the rains. The most important production is cotton, which is exported to a great amount; also indigo, saffron, honey, &c. The corn raised is not sufficient for the inhabitants. The island has no venomous serpents. The climate is uncommonly healthy, but the southeast wind, called Sirocco, is always unpleasant. The inhabitants resemble those of Barbary. They speak a corrupt dialect of the Arabic, which is generally supposed to have an affinity to the Punic. Italian is also spoken in the towns.—The first possessors of Malta, of whom there is any account, were Carthaginians. In the 16th century it was occupied by the knights of St. John of Jerusalem. In 1798 the knights were compelled to surrender to Bonaparte. In 1800 Malta was taken by the British, and confirmed to them by the treaty of Paris in 1814. In no fortress in Europe are the defences so imposing; in Gibraltar admiration is excited by the works of nature, in Malta by the works of art. To garrison the latter completely would require above 30,000 men.

Man, Isle of, the Monæda of Ptolemy, isl. Great Britain, in the Irish sea, nearly equidistant from the coasts of England, Scotland, and Ireland; 30 miles long, and 12, where widest, broad; 70 in circ. Sq. m. 220. Pop. in 1792, 27,913; in 1821, 40,084. Chief towns, Castletown, the capital, Douglas, Peel, and Ramsey. Lon. 4. 30. W. Lat. 54. 15. N. The interior is mountainous. Snowfield or Snafield, the highest summit, is about 2,000 feet above the sea. The soil, not naturally very productive, is greatly fertilized, by the abundance of sea-weed cast upon the shore; agriculture of late has made great advances. The productions are barley, wheat, oats, turnips, potatoes, flax, cattle, sheep, poultry, &c. The island contains 17 parishes, under the jurisdiction of a bishop, styled bishop of Sodor and Man, who is sole baron of the island.—The Manx language, a kind of Gaelic prevails in the interior, but English is spoken in the towns.—On the south is a small island, called the Calf of Man, which is separated by a narrow channel.

Mancha, (La,) pr. Spain, in New Castile, bounded N. by Toledo, E. by Murcia, S. by Murcia and Jaen, and W. by Estramadura; almost every way surrounded by mountains, forming an immense plain, intersected by ridges of low hills and rocks; not an inclosure of any kind, except mud walls, about the villages; not a tree to be seen; a few dwarfish evergreen oaks and olive plants, scarce deserving the name of trees. All this vast tract of open country is cultivated in corn and vines. A late traveller says, "There is no labourer nor young female peasant who is not well acquainted with Don Quixote and Sancho." This is the most cheerful country of Spain; the inhabitants are affable, and great lovers of music and dancing. Pop. 214,087 Sq. m. 8,000. Chief towns, Ciudad, Real and Ocana.

Manchester, (Mancupium, or Manucium, of the Romans,) t. Eng. in Lancashire; 37 E. Liverpool, 38 ENE. Chester, 182 NW. London. Lon. 2. 14. W. Lat. 53. 29. N. Pop. in 1757, 19,000; in 1791, 70,000; in 1811, 98,573. H. upwards of 16,000. Pop. estimated, in 1818, at 111,000. It is situated on the Irwell, at the place where this river receives the united streams of the Irk and Medlock. The Irwell is rendered navigable to Liverpool. By means of canals the town has a communication by water both with the eastern and western seas, being in the line of navigation which extends across the island from shore to shore; while it is equally open to the north and south by branches from the main trunk.

Manchester is the great centre of the cotton trade, the greatest manufacturing town in the kingdom, and except London, and perhaps also Liverpool, the most populous and wealthy. The quantity of cotton imported into England in 1817, was 479,261 bales, or about 132,000,000 lbs., of which 110,000,000 lbs. were consumed or converted into yarn. The greater part of this immense manufacturing business centres in Manchester, extending around it in all directions, and has given birth to the greatest system of machinery that ever existed. The principal articles manufactured are velvets, fustians, dimities, calicoes, checks, tickings, jeans, shirtings, ginghams, quiltings, handkerchiefs, nankeens, diapers, muslinets, muslins, cambrics, and almost every kind of fancy cotton, and cotton and silk goods. There are in and about the town iron founderies, manufactures of hats, sulphuric acid, wire, &c. Among the causes that have conspired to render this place the great emporium of manufactures, the chief is doubtless its central position, and its situation on a navigable river, in the midst of inexhaustible fields of coal.

The central parts of the town consists of a number of streets, lanes, alleys, and courts, all crowded with ware houses, factories, and shops. But towards the extremities of the town, among the modern buildings, are very handsome and elegant dwelling houses. There are 16 churches belonging to the establishment, many of which are elegant edifices. The dissenting houses of worship are generally very handsome, belonging chiefly to Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists, Quakers, and Catholics. The seminaries of education and charitable institutions are numerous and liberally supported. The Cheetham hospital, commonly called the College, intended for the education of 80 boys, from the age of 6 to 14, has a library of 18 or 20,000 vols. The grammar school was founded in the beginning of the 16th century. The Library and Philosophical Society is a respectable institution, founded in 1781.—Markets on Tuesday and Saturday.

Mantua, delegation, Aust. Italy, in the government of Milan, lying on the north of the duchies of Modena and Parma. Pop. 213,250. Sq. m. 886. The Po passes through it, and it is also watered by the Oglio, Mincio, Secchia, &c. The surface is very level, the soil of great fertility; the principal product grain; others rice, hemp, flax, fruit, and vines. The late duchy of Mantua, or the Mantuan, was of larger extent than the present province.

Mantua, city, Aust. Italy, capital of a delegation, formerly of a duchy of the same name; 70 WSW. Venice, 70 ESE. Milan. Lon. 10. 46. E. Lat. 45. 9. N. Pop. 22,896; 3, or 4,000 Jews. Bp.see. It is situated on 2 islands formed by the expansion of the waters of the Mincio, one about a mile square, the other a little more than half that size; on this is the most closely built part of the city. The extensive suburb of Ceresè is on the main land. Mantua is well fortified, and is by nature and art one of the strongest places in Europe. Most of the streets are broad, regular, and well paved; the houses of stone, and generally well built; and the public squares spacious and elegant. It contains a magnificent cathedral, 4 collegiate, and 19 parish chh., numerous convents and hospitals, a public library, an academy of arts and sciences, a gallery of antiquities, and several valuable collections of paintings. Other public objects of interest are the palaces of justice, of Gonzaga, and of T, so called from its form; the church of St. Andrew, the Corte with its halls, the famous bust of Virgil, and the buildings of the university, which was founded here 1625.

The silk manufactures were formerly flourishing, and are still considerable; those of leather and woollens are also important.—In the summer and autumn the city is unhealthy. It is a place of great antiquity, said to be older than Rome; and a century ago contained about 50,000 inh.—Virgil was born at Andes, now Pietola, in the vicinity.

Maracay, or Maracao, t. Venezuela, in the valley of Aragoa, on E. side of lake Valencia; 40 SW. Caraccas. Pop. 8,400. The sandy soil renders it healthy, but hot. Three fourths of the houses are of stone, and well built. The inhabitants are industrious, and have numerous plantations of cotton, indigo, coffee, corn, &c.

Maracaybo, pr. Venezuela, or Caraccas, surrounding Maracaybo lake; bounded N. by the Caribbean sea, E. by Venezuela, S. by Varinas and New Grenada, and W. by the province of St. Martha. Pop. estimated at 100,000. It is 300 leagues from N. to S.; the climate very hot; the soil in the N. barren, in the south very fertile.

Maracaybo, t. Venezuela, capital of a province to which it gives name; 270 E. Carthagena. Lon. 71. 17. W. Lat. 10. 13. N. It is situated on W. side of the lake Maracaybo, about 20 miles from the sea. Most of the houses are covered with reeds; but the town is fortified, and the number of the inhabitants, in 1801, amounted to 22,000; which number was afterwards increased to 24,000 by an accession of refugees from St. Domingo; the slaves do not exceed 5,000. Here is a large parochial church, a hospital, and 4 convents. Vessels from 25 to 30 tons are continually coming hither with manufactures and merchandises from the places near the lake, which are afterwards put on board Spanish ships that come hither to buy them.—Ships are built at Maracaybo, which trade all over America, and even to Spain, this place being very commodious for ship-building.

Maracaybo, lake, or rather gulf of South America, about 200 miles long, and 70 broad, running from S. to N. and empties itself into the North sea; the entrance of which is well defended by strong forts. As the tide flows into this lake, its water is somewhat brackish, notwithstanding the many rivers it receives. It abounds with all sorts of fish, some of which are very large. By the navigation of this lake, the inhabitants of Venezuela carry on a trade with those of New Grenada. The lake becomes narrower towards the middle, where the town is erected. Lon. 72. W. Marblehead, p-t. & s-p. Essex co. Mass.; 4 1-2 SE. Salem, 16 NE. Boston, W. 456. Lon. 70. 51. W. Lat. 42. 32. N. Pop. in 1810, 5,900; in 1820, 5,630. It contains a bank, a custom house, 2 insurance offices, a market house, an alms house, 2 rope walks, an academy, and 5 houses of public worship, 2 for Congregationalists, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Methodists, and 1 for Baptists.

This town is much more largely concerned in the bank fisheries than any other in the United States, and this business is carried on here with great spirit and enterprize. In 1818 there were employed in the bank and coast fisheries 103 vessels, carrying 7,739 tons, and giving occupation to 760 men; 80 of these vessels, of 60 tons and upwards, were engaged in the fishery of the Grand Bank and of Newfoundland. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1818, amounted to 12,301 tons. The harbour lies in front of the town, a mile long from NE. to SW., and half a mile wide, and is formed by a narrow strip of land making a semicircle at the SW. It is very excellent, and may be entered at all times, but is considerably exposed to northeast storms. It is defended by fort Sewall, which stands on a point near the entrance of the harbour, and is one of the finest forts in the country. It is formed by 2 angular batteries of earth and stone, with a stone and brick wall in their rear. The pieces mounted are 2 twenty-four, and 10 eighteen pounders. The barracks, which are bomb proof, are capable of accommodating a garrison of 60 or 70 men, which is about the number stationed here.

Few towns in the United States suffered so much as this during the revolutionary and the late war. At the peace of Dec. 1814, no less than 500 of her sons were in foreign prisons.—The situation of the town is remarkably salubrious. The average number of births in a year is about 200, of deaths, including those abroad, 120.

Marks, (Lake of,) or Shibkah el Low-deah, (an. Tichasa,) large lake of Africa, in Biledulgerid. Lon. 3. 50. E. Lat. 31. 50. N. This lake reaches near 60 m. from E. to W. and the breadth is about 18; yet it is not all of it a collection of water; there being several dry places interspersed all over it, that look like so many islands. To the eastward there is one of these islands, which, though uninhabited, yet is very large, and well stocked with date-trees. The situation of this lake with regard to the sea, the Syrtes, and the river Triton, would induce us to take it for the Palus Tritonis, of the ancients; and that the island mentioned is the Chersonesus of Diodorus Siculus, and the Phla of Herodotus.

Marquesas, Marquis of Mendoza's Islands, or Mendoca Islands, cluster of islands in the S. Pacific ocean, first discovered by Mendoc, a Spaniard, in 1597, and visited by captain Cook in 1774. They are 5 in number, and named St. Christina, or Wahitaho, San Pedro, or O-Ni-teo, Dominica, or O-hivahoa, forming a group; Madalena 8 leagues distant, and Hood's island 5 1-2 leagues from Dominica. The trees, plants, and other productions of these isles, says captain Cook, are nearly the same as at Otaheite and the Society isles. The refreshments to be got are hogs, fowls, plantains, yams, and some other roots; likewise bread-fruit, and cocoa-nuts; but of these not many. The inhabitants are without exception the finest race of people in this sea; for fine shape and regular features, they perhaps surpass all other nations; nevertheless, the affinity of their language to that spoken in Otaheite and the Society isles, shews that they are of the same nation. The men are punctured or curiously tattooed from head to foot. The figures are various, and seem to be directed more by fancy than custom. Women are but little punctured; youths and young children not at all, and as fair as some Europeans. The men are in general tall; about 5 feet 10 inches, or 6 feet. Pop. of the group vaguely estimated at 50,000. Lon. 138. 45. to 140. 30. W. Lat. 8. 30. to 10. 30. S.

Pop. in 1806, 102,217. H. 12,000. Bp. see. The form of the city is nearly square, and the port, entered by a narrow passage from the sea, is almost in the centre of the town. It is surrounded by rocky hills, encompassed by walls, 4 miles in circuit, and is divided into Old and New Town. The former is composed of narrow dirty streets, with ill built houses; the latter forming the south and east quarters, comprising 2-3ds of the whole, is equal in beauty to any town in France; the streets broad and straight; the squares spacious and handsome, and the buildings remarkable for their elegance. The street which separates it from the Old Town is one of the finest in Europe, and by some thought superior to the famous Toledo at Naples. There are several public squares, which are planted with trees, and adorned with fountains. The public buildings are magnificent; some of the principal are the exchange, the cathedral, the theatre, and the arsenal. It contains a lazaretto, 14 hospitals, an academy of sciences, a medical society, a royal college, a navigation school, a public library of 90,000 volumes, a cabinet of natural history, a botanic garden, and an observatory, which affords a picturesque view of the town and surrounding country.

Marseilles is a place of great commerce, and the chief outlet for all the natural and artificial productions of the south of France. The number of vessels that entered the harbour, in 1788, was 5,000; in 1818, 7,516, carrying 901,720 tons. The most important manufacture is soap, of which there are 75 establishments. Other manufactures are coral articles, silk and embroidered stuffs, woollens, cottons, chintz, leather, marble, porcelain, earthen ware, hats, perfumes, &c. It is one of the oldest towns in France, said to have been founded by a Greek colony from Phocis about 600 B. C. The plague is said to have carried off 60,000 of the inhabitants in 1720.—Natives Pytheas, Euthymenes, Mascaron, Puget, Durfe, and Dumar-sais.

Martinico, or Martinique, one of the largest of the Carribbee islands in the West Indies, belonging to France; 48 miles long, about 16 broad, and 135 in circ., leaving out the capes. Sq. m. 360. Pop. in 1815, 95,206; whites 9,206; free people of colour 8,630; slaves 77,577. Chief towns, St. Pierre and Fort Royal. Lon. 61. to 61.26. W. Lat. 14. 24. to 14. 56. N. It is very uneven, and intersected in all parts by a number of hillocks, which are mostly of a conical form. Three mountains rise above these smaller eminences. The highest bears the indelible marks of a volcano. The woods with which it is covered, continually attract the clouds; which occasions noxious damps, and contributes to make it horrid and inaccessible, while the two others are in most parts cultivated. From these mountains, but chiefly from the first, issue many springs that water the island. These waters, which flow in gentle streams, are changed into torrents on the slightest storm. Their quality partakes of the nature of the soil they pass through; in some places they are excellent, in others so bad, that the inhabitants are obliged to drink the water they have collected in the rainy season. The productions consist of sugar, coffee, cassia, cotton, indigo, cocoa, ginger, &c. The exports in 1788, amounted to 1,201,875*l.*; in 1810, to 791,773*l.*

Towns. Annapolis is the seat of government. Baltimore is much the largest town.—The other most considerable towns are Fredericktown, Hagerstown, Easton, Cumberland, Snowhill, Chestertown, Williamsport, and Cambridge.

Education. The University of Maryland, St. Mary's College, and Baltimore College are in Baltimore. There are 17 academies which are supported in part by the state.

Religion. Maryland was originally settled by Roman Catholics, who are the most numerous denomination of Christians in the state. The other denominations are Presbyterians, Methodists, Episcopalians, who had in 1820, 48 ministers, Baptists, who had in 1817, 33 congregations, Friends, 28 meetings, Lutherans, Dutch Reformed, Mennonists, &c.

Government. The legislature is composed of a senate, and consisting of 15 members, chosen for 5 years, by electors, and a house of delegates, consisting of 4 members from each of the counties, and 2 from each of the two cities, Baltimore and Annapolis, chosen annually, on the 1st Monday in Oct. The governor and an executive council of 5 persons, are chosen annually, by a joint ballot of both houses, on the 2d Monday in November. The Assembly meets annually on the first Monday in November.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Potomac, which divides this state from Virginia, the Susquehanna, Patapsco, Patuxent, Elk, Sassafras, Chester, Choptank, Nanticoke, and Pocomoke.

Face of the country. The country on the eastern side of the Chesapeake, with the exception of a small part of the northern extremity, is an extensive plain, low and sandy, and much intersected by rivers and creeks, having but few springs, and abounding, in many places, with stagnant water. In this part the air in summer is moist, sultry, and disagreeable, and the inhabitants are subject to agues and intermittent fevers, and many of them have a sickly appearance. The Maryland part of the peninsula included between the Delaware and Chesapeake bays, is much lower and more uniformly level from the Delaware part. It is also more intersected by rivers and creeks, and the land is of better quality. The soil is well adapted to raising tobacco, wheat, Indian corn, and sweet potatoes. The genuine white wheat, which is said to be peculiar to this state, is raised in some of the counties on the eastern shore. The country, on the western shore of the Chesapeake, below the falls of the rivers, is similar to that on the eastern shore. Above these falls the country becomes gradually uneven and hilly, and in the western part of the state it is mountainous. The western part is crossed by ranges of mountains, which pass through Pennsylvania and Virginia, under various names, as South mountain, North mountain, Sideling hill, Warrior's, Evit's, Wills, and Alleghany mountains. The hilly and mountainous parts abound in springs of excellent water, and the climate is highly salubrious and agreeable.

Soil and productions. The soil is generally a red clay or loam, and much of it is excellent, producing good crops of wheat, Indian corn, hemp, and flax. Here are also fine orchards, and apples, pears, peaches, plums, and cherries are abundant. Of peaches, the inhabitants make large quantities of peach brandy, and of apples, apple brandy and cider. The forests abound in nut bearing trees, which feed great numbers of swine. These swine run wild, and when fattened, are killed, barrelled, and exported in great quantities. Beef and mutton are also plentiful. Some cotton for domestic use is raised in this state, but it is of inferior quality.

Commerce. The most considerable export from this state is that of flour; and next to this, is that of tobacco. The other exports are iron, lumber, Indian corn, pork, flaxseed, beans, &c. The trade of the state is principally carried on from Baltimore with the other states, with the West Indies, and various parts of Europe.

Manufactures. This state abounds with mines of excellent iron ore, and has also some coal.—Furnaces have been erected in various parts for the manufacture of pig and bar iron, hollow ware, cannon, stoves, &c. There are a number of glass works, paper mills, &c. Vast quantities of rye are distilled into whiskey; but the most considerable manufacture is that of flour.

Mascat, or Maskat, or Muscat, (an. Moscha), t. Arabia; 220 SSE. Gombroon, 940 E. Mecca. Lon. 59. 20. E. Lat. 23. 28. N. Pop. about 3,000. This is the principal town of the province of Oman, so that the schiech, or imam, is by many travellers called king of Mascat. It stands at one end of a beautiful plain, on the side of a small gulf, encompassed with steep rocks, forming an excellent harbour, in which the largest vessels may find shelter. This harbour is likewise protected by forts, and the city thus fortified both by art and nature. Arrian called it Mosca, and speaks of it as being, even then, a great emporium of the trade of Arabia, Persia, and India. Mascat has ever enjoyed this advantage, and even at present possesses an extensive commerce. English ships sailing between India and Bassora usually stop here; it has also a large trade with the interior by caravans. In no other Mahometan city are the Banians so numerous as in Mascat; their number in this city amounts to no less than 1,200. They are permitted to live agreeably to their own laws, to bring their wives hither, to set up idols in their chambers, and to burn their dead. Mascat is the key of Arabia and Persia, and the whole trade is carried on by Banians.

Towns. Boston is the chief town. The other most considerable maritime towns are Salem, Newburyport, Marblehead, Beverly, Gloucester, Charlestown, Plymouth, and New Bedford. Worcester, Northampton, Springfield, Greenfield, Pittsfield, Haverhill, Dedham, Taunton, Concord, and many others are pleasant and flourishing inland towns.

Education. There is a university at Cambridge, a college at Williamstown, a theological seminary at Andover, a collegiate charity institution at Amherst, and there are 26 academies. A number of these are well endowed, and many of them are in a flourishing state. Besides the academies, grammar schools, public and private, are constantly supported in most of the principal towns, and good schools are common throughout the state. Literary institutions are liberally patronized, and in no part of the world is information more generally diffused.

Religion. The number of the congregations of the several denominations of Christians, was stated in 1821, as follows ; Congregationalists 373, Baptists 153, Friends 39, Episcopalians 22, Universalists 23, Presbyterians 10, Freewill Baptists 10, Shakers 4, Catholics 2, Sandemanians 2, Swedenborgians 1.

Government. The legislature is composed of a senate of 40 members, and a house of representatives. The governor, lieutenant governor, and senators are chosen annually on the first Monday in April, by the people. The representatives are chosen annually in May. Each town having 150 rateable polls, may send one, and another for every additional 225 polls. The legislature assemble on the last Wednesday in May, annually, and meet also in January.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Connecticut, Merrimack, Concord, Nashua, Charles, Mystic, Neponset, Taunton, Chickapee, Deerfield, Westfield, Miller's, and Housatonic. The principal canal is Middlesex canal, connecting Boston harbour with the Merrimack, commencing in the town of Chelmsford ; 28 miles in length.

Islands, &c. The principal islands are Nantucket, Martha's Vineyard, and Elizabeth islands. The most noted capes are Cape Ann, Cape Cod, and Cape Malabar. The most considerable bays are Massachusetts, Cape Cod, Barnstable, Plymouth, and Buzzard's bays. There are no large lakes, but there are numerous ponds.

Mountains. The range of the Green Mountains passes from north to south, through the western part of this state. The principal chain takes the name of Hoosac mountain. The highest summits are Saddle and Takonnack mountains. The other most noted mountains in the state, are Wachuset, in Princeton, Mount Tom and Mount Holyoke, near Northampton, and Mount Toby in Sunderland.

Face of the country. The face of the country is greatly diversified. The southeastern part is mostly level. There are also level districts of small extent in the vicinity of the Merrimack in the northeast. Salt marshes are numerous in the maritime parts, though not very extensive. Most of that part bordering on the sea coast, and extending into the interior as far as the county of Worcester, may be regarded as the level division, exhibiting no very considerable elevations. The five western counties of Worcester, Hampshire, Franklin, Hampden, and Berkshire, present the greatest irregularity of surface, and constitute the highlands of the state. These counties, however, abound in vast tracts of elevated lands diversified with gentle swells, in large districts of pine plains, in valleys of various extent, as well as in wide intervals, particularly on Connecticut river.

Soil, &c. The soil is exceedingly various, comprising every description from the most fertile to the most unproductive. In the southeastern part it is mostly light and sandy, interspersed, however, with numerous fertile tracts. In the middle and northern part, towards the sea coast, it is of a much better quality, though not generally distinguished for its natural fertility; but by excellent cultivation, a great portion of it is rendered highly productive. The middle and western parts have generally a strong rich soil, excellent for grazing, and suited to most of the purposes of agriculture. The state is almost universally well watered. The streams of every description are remarkably clear and beautiful. The farms generally consist of from 100 to 300 acres, and are for the most part, well cultivated. In no part of the United States have there been greater advances made in agricultural improvements than in Massachusetts. The country is intersected in every direction by roads, which are kept in a good state of repair.

Productions. The principal productions are, Indian corn, rye, wheat, oats, barley, pease, beans, buck wheat, potatoes, hops, flax, and hemp. Beef, pork, butter and cheese, are abundant in most parts of the state, and of excellent quality. The county of Berkshire, in particular, is distinguished for its extensive dairies. The state abounds with orchards, and great quantities of cider are annually made, which is the common beverage of the inhabitants. The principal cultivated fruits are apples, peaches, pears, quinces, plums, cherries, and currants. Gardening is an object of attention throughout the state, and all the hortulan vegetables suited to the climate, together with a variety of domestic fruits, are, in this way, extensively cultivated.

Commerce. Massachusetts has a greater number of inhabitants engaged in commerce than any other state in the union. The greatest part of the fisheries in the U. States belongs to this state. The principal articles of export are fish, beef, lumber, pork, ardent spirits, flax seed, whale oil, spermaceti, and various manufactures.

Manufactures. This state holds a high rank in point of manufactures. The most considerable are those of cotton cloths, boots and shoes, ardent spirits, leather, cordage, wrought and cast iron, nails, woollens, ships, straw bonnets, hats, cabinet work, paper, oil, and muskets. There is an extensive national establishment for the manufacture of arms at Springfield.

Minerals. The principal mines are those of iron, which are found in various parts, and there are numerous establishments for manufacturing iron. The counties of Plymouth and Bristol afford great quantities of this mineral, and there are several rich iron mines in the county of Berkshire. A lead mine is found at South Hadley, and at some other places. Ochres and other fossil productions have been found in various places. Quarries of good marble are found in Lanesborough, Stockbridge, Pittsfield, Sheffield, and several other places in Berkshire county. There are quarries of slate at Lancaster, Harvard, and Bernardston, and of soap stone, at Middlefield. Lime stone is found in great abundance in the county of Berkshire, and freestone in all parts of the state. Great quantities of beautiful granite for building is obtained from Chelmsford and Tyngsborough.

Climate. The climate is subject to the extremes of heat and cold. The air, however, is generally dry, serene, and healthy. The thermometer in summer is frequently observed to exceed 77° for 40 or 50 days together; and sometimes rises to 100°. The weather in winter is variable, and sometimes very cold.

Masuah, or Matsuah, or Massowah, the principal s-p. Abyssinia, on a small island of the same name in the Red sea, near the coast. Lon. 39. 40. E. Lat. 15. 35. N. Pop. about 2,000. It has an excellent harbour, and water deep enough for ships of any size, to the very edge of the island. Here they may ride in the utmost security, from whatever point, or with whatever degree of strength the wind blows. Nearly all the foreign trade of Abyssinia is carried on from this town. Its intercourse is chiefly with Mocha and Jidda. The exports are rhinoceros' horns, gold, ivory, honey, wax, and slaves. There are about 20 stone houses; the rest are built of poles and bent grass. There are 4 mosques. As it takes its modern, so it received its ancient name from its harbour; it was called by the ancients Sebasticum Os, from the capacity of its port, which is distributed into three divisions. The island itself is very small, scarcely three quarters of a mile in length, and about half that in breadth; one third occupied by houses, one by cisterns to receive the rain-water, and the last reserved for burying the dead.

The population of the island, in 1790, exclusive of the military, was estimated at 8,000 whites, and 12,000 blacks. It is of circular form about 150 miles in circ., and composed chiefly of rugged and irregular mountains, rising usually into points or pinnacles; and containing caves of great extent. Some of the mountains are said to be so high as to be covered with snow throughout the year. The climate is warm, but notwithstanding, very wholesome; the air serene, and very little exposed to hurricanes. The soil is, generally, red and stony, though mountainous towards the sea coast, but within land there are many spots both flat and fertile. The whole island is well watered. It produces all the trees, fruits, and herbs which grow in this part of the globe, and in great plenty; and is famous for its ebony, esteemed the most solid, close, and shining, of any in the world. Groves of oranges, both sweet and sour, are common, as well as citrons; and the pine apple grows spontaneously in very great perfection. The island produces little grain or any other useful vegetable except the potatoe; but depends for provisions almost entirely on Bourbon, which is considered its granary. Bourbon having no port, its trade is carried on entirely by the channel of Mauritius. The exports consist in excellent coffee, a great part of it raised in Bourbon, cotton, indigo, sugar, and cloves. There are 2 ports, Port Louis, or North West Port, the capital, and Port Bourbon.—The London society have a missionary here.

Meaco, or Kio, city, Japan, in Nippon ; 160 SW. Jeddo. Lon. 153. 30. E. Lat. 35. 24. N. It was once the metropolis of the whole empire ; it is still the ecclesiastical capital, the residence of the dairo, or spiritual sovereign, and is the centre of the literature and science of the empire ; the imperial almanac being published here, and most of the books that circulate through Japan. It is situated near the middle of the S. coast, in a fertile and spacious plain, surrounded at some distance by high mountains, for the most part covered with stately temples, monasteries, burying-places, and pleasure houses, all of them adorned with gardens, orchards, and the greatest variety of verdure, watered by a vast number of rivulets which come down from those mountains. Three rivers unite their streams in the centre of the city, whence the place is divided into Upper and Lower Towns. This twofold city appears, by the stately high walls of it, to have been about 20 miles in length, and 9 or 10 in breadth, when in its full splendour ; besides its large suburbs, and the imperial palace, which is a city by itself, and divided from the rest.

The streets are generally narrow, but long and straight ; and so full of inhabitants, that a public account being taken of them, according to their several sects, the whole was found to be near 500,000, exclusive of the several thousands that compose the dairo's court, and a much greater number of bonzas and nuns ; who, on another list taken of the city, were found to amount to above 52,000, and the rest of the inhabitants to 477,557 ; in all, 529,726, exclusive still of the dairo's court, and of an great multitude of strangers, who flock to it from all parts of the empire. Its temples are numerous, and some of them very magnificent. Meaco, though much decayed in consequence of what it suffered in the civil wars, from pillage, massacre, and conflagration, is still the grand storehouse of the manufactures of Japan, and of foreign and home merchandize, and the principal seat of their commerce.

Meath, co. Ireland, in Leinster; bounded N. by Cavan and Monaghan, NE. by Louth, E. by the Irish sea, SE. by Dublin, S. by Kildare, and W. by West Meath; 30 miles from N. to S., and from 25 to 35 E. to W. It contained in 1792, 147 parishes, about 22,468 houses, and 112,400 souls; Catholics to Protestants 40 to 1. The soil of Meath is various, but generally rich, and a few coarse hills, with very little waste land: the bogs are neither numerous nor extensive; consequently fuel is scarce and dear. Trim is the county town. Several small bishoprics were gradually united into one see, and received the name of Meath in the 12th century.—There is no cathedral, and the episcopal palace is at a village called Ardbraccan, near the town of Navan.

Mecca, city, Arabia, capital of Hedsjas, 40 E. Jidda, its port, 180 S. Medina. Lon. 40. 15. E. Lat. 21. 18. N. Pop. formerly 100,000; now stated from 16, to 20,000. It was known to the Greeks by the name of Macoraba, and is called by the Musselmans Omm-Alcora, or Mother of Cities, because it was the birth place of Mahomet. It is situated in a dry, barren, and rocky country; in a narrow valley, inclosed by mountains. The water is brackish, and the pastures distant, and every thing unfavourable for the support of a large population. It is 2 miles long, and 1 broad; the streets regular and rather handsome, being sanded, level, and convenient; the houses of stone, of 3 or 4 stories, built in the Persian or Indian, rather than the Turkish style, having neat fronts, ornamented externally with paintings and mouldings. Many quarters are now abandoned to ruins, and of the houses that remain, two thirds are unoccupied.

Mecca is a city of the greatest celebrity among the Mahometans, and contains the 3 holiest things in the Mahometan world, the well Zemzem, the Caaba, or House of God, and the Black Stone. Zemzem is believed by the followers of Mahomet to be the identical spring which gushed forth in the wilderness for the relief of Hagar and Ishmael; and marvellous efficacy is ascribed to its waters in giving health to the sick, imparting strength of memory, and purifying from the effects of sin. The Caaba, or Kaba, is of great antiquity, and is supposed to have existed in some rude form above 700 years before the birth of Mahomet. It was then a kind of pantheon, in which the Arabs placed more than 360 idols. It is now a spacious portico or piazza, adorned with cupolas and minarets. In the centre of the area stands the Caaba, the most highly venerated part of the building, which is a quadrilateral tower of unequal sides. The 4 sides measure, according to Ali Bey, 37 1-4, 31 1-2, 28 1-4, and 29 French feet; the height 34 1-2 feet. It is covered with a black cloth which is annually renewed by the Turkish sultan. According to the Mahometan legend this temple was built by Abraham; but the stones, (of which every mountain in the world contributed some), came ready fitted for the place they were to occupy. The black stone, the principal wonder of the place, is said to have been originally of a dazzling whiteness, but changed its colour to a deep black. The grand ceremony through which the pilgrims pass is that of going 7 times round the Caaba, kissing each time the sacred stone. It is now generally supposed to be a meteoric stone.

Mecca is entirely supported by pilgrims from every part of the Mahometan world. But the number is now much less than formerly, owing partly to the decay of religious zeal, and the decline of power and wealth of the Mahometan states; and partly also to Mecca's being subject to the rude incursions of the Wahabees. The commerce, now greatly diminished, consists chiefly in the productions and manufactures of India. Notwithstanding the sacred character of the city, it has now little reputation for learning. The language of the inhabitants is corrupted; their manners and dispositions are degraded, and their persons emaciated. No christian is allowed to enter Mecca, and its territory is regarded as sacred to a certain distance round, which is indicated by marks set up.

19,975. H. 2,500. Abp. see. It is divided into two parts by the Dyle, and is tolerably built, though the houses are mostly in an antiquated style. The most remarkable of the public buildings is the cathedral, the tower of which is 350 feet in height. The manufactures consist of fine Brabant lace and linen, besides damask, silk and woollen stuffs, leather and hats. Here are also considerable breweries, and a brisk trade in corn.

Mechoacan, or Valladolid, pr. Mexico. It is bounded N. by part of Guasteca, and the provinces of Zacatecas and Guadalajara, E. by another part of Guasteca and Mexico Proper, S. by the latter and the South sea, which, together with Xalisco, bounds it also W. and NW. It extends 210 miles along the coast, and still farther inland. The climate is extremely good, and the soil remarkably fruitful. In this province are mines of silver, and a few of gold and copper. Among its numerous productions are the cacao, or chocolate-nut, the root mechoacan, several odoriferous gums and balsams, sarsaparilla, ambergris, vanillas, cassia, &c. The natives, now incorporated with the Spaniards, learn all kinds of trades, and are particularly curious in making cabinets, and weaving silk.—Mechoacan was formerly a kingdom, but the Spaniards have reduced it into a bishopric, in which are about 200 towns of converted natives. The greatest part of the trade in this province is carried on by land, there being hardly any sea-ports deserving that name. Pop. 517,000.

Mechoacan, or Valladolid, city, Mexico, and capital of the province of Mechoacan, in the audience of Mexico; 108 W. Mexico. Lon. 102. 11. W. Lat. 20. 5. N. Pop. 18,000. It is situated on a river near the W. side of a lake which abounds with fish. It is the see of a bishop, and contains an elegant cathedral, a college, a hospital, and several convents. It is large, but is not handsome, and has but little commerce.—The elevation of the town above the sea is 6,396 feet.

Mecklenburg, t. Ger. in Mecklenburg-Schwerin, anciently the capital of the Obotrites; 2 S. Wismar. Pop. 501. Some old historians call it Megapolis, as generally supposed, on account of its very great extent; but since the founding of Wismar, it has insensibly sunk to a village.

Mecklenburg-Schwerin, grand duchy, Ger. bounded N. by the Baltic, E. by Pru. Pomerania, SE. by Mecklenburg-Strelitz, S. by Pru. Brandenburg, and the Elbe, and W. by Holstein and Lubec. Pop. 353,000. Sq. m. 4,742. It is divided into 6 districts, each with the chief town of the same name; viz. Schwerin, Parchim, Wismar, Gustrow, Waren, and Rostock. The religion is Lutheran. The rivers are the Elbe, Stor, Reckenitz, and Havel. It has no mountains, but abounds in lakes and forests, and has some tracts of sandy soil, but is in general tolerably fertile, the land being adapted both to tillage and pasturage. The forests consist chiefly of oak, beech, and fir. It is thinly peopled, the inhabitants mostly employed in agriculture; manufactures being in a backward state. The exports consist of corn, wool, sheep, horses, hemp, flax, wood, &c.

Mecklenburg-Strelitz, grand duchy, Ger. lying chiefly in the southeast part of the country of Mecklenburg; and comprising the territories of Stargard and Ratzeburg. Pop. 71,769. Sq.m. 627. Strelitz is the chief town. The religion is Lutheran. The soil, productions, &c. are similar to those of Mecklenburg-Schwerin.

Meckley, or Cassay, country, Thibet, bounded E. by China, S. by Ava, or Birmah, and W. by thick forests, which separate it from Bengal; about 350 miles in length, and 170 in breadth; subject to the king of Birmah. Lon. 93. 20. to 98. 40. E. Lat. 22. 30. to 27. 20. N.

Mecon, (an. Serus), large river, Asia, which rises in the mountains of Thibet, between the 34th and 35th deg. N. Lat., and taking a direction S. inclining a little E., it passes through the Chinese province of Yunnan, the kingdoms of Laos, Cambodia, &c., and runs into the Eastern sea, rather more than 200 miles S. of the city of Cambodia. This river is at first called Kiou-long, and holds this name till it enters the kingdom of Laos, when it takes the name of Mecon. When it enters Cambodia, it takes the name of the country, till at the city of Cambodia it divides into two branches, the eastern of which is called Cambodia, or the Japanese River, and the western, Oubequeme. Length about 2,000 miles.

Mecran, pr. Persia, bounded N. by Segestan and Candahar, E. by Hindoostan, S. by the Indian sea, and W. by Kerman. It is the Gedrosia of the ancients. A chain of mountains crosses it, and divides it into two almost equal parts. The S. part is dry, and little more than a desert, for 180 miles together. The N. part is not so much so, but still animals are rare, and the soil far from fertile. Water is scarce, and but few rivers are found. Deep and moving sands often stop travellers in their journey, and sometimes overwhelm them. Kidge is the capital.

Medina, or Medina en Nebi, before the days of Mahomet, Jathreb, (an. Iatrippa), city, Arabia, in Hedsjas, 70 E. Jambo, its port on the Red sea, 180 N. Mexico. Lon. 40. 10. E. Lat. 24. N. Pop. stated at 6,000. Houses stated by some at only 500, by others including the fort at 900. It is regarded by Mahometans as sacred, from its containing the tomb of Mahomet. It stands on a fertile spot, in a mountainous desert, and is surrounded by a slight wall. Most of the houses are poorly built, and the place is of no importance, except from its containing the sepulchre of Mahomet. This sepulchre is held in high veneration by Mahometans, yet its visitation is not considered necessary or highly meritorious, and Medina is much less visited by pilgrims than Mecca. Neither the tomb nor the mosque in which it is inclosed, is distinguished by any magnificence; but it is remarkable for an immense treasure of pearls, precious stones, &c., accumulated for ages by the contributions of rich Mahometans; and it is defended by a guard of 40 eunuchs. A few years since the political and religious state of Medina underwent an important change, and its present condition is not precisely known.

Melinda, km. Africa, situated near the coast of the Indian sea. This country is for the most part fertile, producing almost all the necessaries of life, except wheat & rice, both which are brought thither from other parts; and those who cannot purchase them, make use of potatoes in their stead, which are here fine, large, and in great plenty. They likewise abound with great varieties of fruit-trees, roots, plants, and other esculent, and with melons of exquisite taste. The country is covered with citron trees, with whose odoriferous smell the air is agreeably perfumed almost all the year. They have also a great plenty of venison, game, oxen, sheep, geese, hens, and other poultry; and one breed of sheep, whose tails weigh in general between 20 and 30 pounds. The men are black, swarthy, tawny, and white; the women mostly of an olive. They are partly Mahometans and partly Pagans.

Melinda, city, Africa, capital of a kingdom of the same name, near the coast of the Indian sea. Lon. 41. 50. E. Lat. 3. 0. S. It is pleasantly situated in a beautiful plain, surrounded by fine gardens and orchards, stored with all sorts of fruit-trees, especially citrons and oranges. It contains many mosques. The houses are built of square stone, for the most part stately, and some very magnificent, and all of them richly furnished, being inhabited chiefly by rich merchants, and much resorted to by vessels from the Red sea, Persia, and the northern parts of India. The exports consist of gold, copper, quicksilver, ivory, wax, and drugs, which are exchanged for silks, cottons, and linen cloths, corn, and other commodities. The only inconvenience attending this metropolis is, that the anchorage stands at some distance from it, on account of the rocks and shelves which surround it towards the sea side, rendering the access difficult and dangerous. The city is supposed by the learned to be the Mondel, mentioned by Avicenna, as a place whence they had their aloes. It is said to have formerly contained 30,000 Portuguese and 17 churches; but the churches and other buildings erected by the Portuguese are now in ruins. It is seldom visited by Europeans, and is now little known.

Mentz, or Mayence, or Maynz, city, Ger. in Hesse-Darmstadt, capital of the province of the Rhine, formerly capital of an electorate and archbishopric, situated at the conflux of the Rhine and Maine, called in Latin Moguntium, or Moguntiacum; 37 SE. Coblenz, 99 N. by E. Strasburg. Lon. 8. E. Lat. 49. 59. N. Pop. in 1816, 25,251. H. 2,165. It is the strongest town in Germany; towards the river less defence is necessary, but on the land side the works are extensive and complicated. At the southern extremity is a citadel; at the northern two lunettes; and bastions with ravelins extend around. There are besides on SW. side out-works of great strength, viz. 6 forts and a retrenched redoubt, besides other works. The fortress belongs to the Germanic confederation.

The town is built nearly in the form of a semicircle, the Rhine forming the base. The interior is by no means handsome. The streets are crooked, narrow, and gloomy, and the houses mostly old fashioned. It contains a cathedral, a lyceum, schools of medicine, a cabinet of coins and medals, a cabinet of natural history, a gallery of paintings, and a library of 90,000 vols.

The trade consists partly in wine, and partly in commission business, connected with the navigation of the river. The town is famous for the beauty of its environs and prospects. A university was founded here by Charlemagne, in 800; and established in 1482, by the archbishop Diether, of the house of Isenburg, but has been since converted into a lyceum. The honour of the invention of printing was claimed by John Faust a goldsmith of Mentz, and by John Guttenberg, born here in 1408.—The archbishopric of Mentz was an extensive electoral principality. The archbishop was also elector, and ranked as the first archbishop in Germany. The archbishopric was suppressed in 1802, and the city of Mentz is now only a bishop's see.

Merrimack, r. which rises in N. H. The most northern branch, the Pemigewasset, rises from the White Mountains and Moosehillock, and after a southerly course of about 70 miles, is joined by the Winnipiseogee at Sanbornton, and then takes the name of Merrimack. The course continues southerly about 80 miles, as the river runs, when it reaches Massachusetts line. It then turns to the east, and after a course of about 50 miles, falls into the Atlantic, below Newburyport. It is navigable for vessels of 200 tons to Haverhill. By means of this river and the Middlesex canal, an extensive boat navigation is opened between Boston and the state of New Hampshire, as far as Concord. The canals constructed to render the river navigable are Bow canal a few miles below Concord; Hookset canal 6 miles lower; Amoskeag canal 8 miles further down; Union canal below Amoskeag; a canal shunning Cromwell's falls between Merrimack and Litchfield; 15 miles lower are Wicasee falls and canal; 3 miles lower is the entrance of Middlesex canal.

Merrimack, or Maremeck, r. Missouri, which rises about 250 SW. of its mouth, and flows into the Mississippi, 18 below St. Louis. It is not navigable, except in the spring and autumn, more than about 50 miles. It waters the country of the mines, which are situated mostly to the south. Much of the land on it is poor.

Messina, (an. Zancle, Zanclea, Messene, and Messana), city, Sicily, in the valley of Demona ; 47 NNE. Catania, 104 E. Palermo. Lon. 15. 49. E. Lat. 38. 11. N. Abp. see. The population has been very fluctuating ; in the 17th century, during its most flourishing condition, it was estimated at 100,000 ; in 1781, reduced to 25, or 26,000 ; in 1798, 45,000. It has of late been very flourishing, and the population was estimated, in 1820, at between 80, and 90,000. It is situated at the north-east extremity of the island, on a strait called Faro di Messina or straits of Messina, celebrated from containing within their precincts Scylla and Charybdis. The harbour is the best in Sicily, having from 20 to 40 fathoms water close to the quay, and its situation is esteemed superior to any other in the Mediterranean. The city is defended by 2 forts, and the harbour by a pentagonal fortification. It is the strongest place in the island, and has a lazaretto, the only one in Sicily.

Messina is the second town in Sicily. It is narrow, high grounds rising immediately behind it. It makes a remarkably fine appearance from on board a vessel at the distance of a mile. The street called Marina or Palazzata, formed of a row of elegant buildings, extends along the harbour for more than a mile, and the whiteness of the houses forms a beautiful contrast with the deep green of the forests behind. The city contains a cathedral, about 50 chh., 30 convents, 4 public libraries, 4 seminaries of education, one large hospital, and other charitable institutions. The commerce is extensive. The produce of the environs is chiefly fruits and wines, and the principal manufacture silks. The exports consist of these articles, and the other productions of the island. About 10,000 pipes of Faro wine are annually exported.

Messina has been remarkable for its misfortunes. The two most recent as well as calamitous, were, 1st. the plague of 1743, which carried off in a few months 35,000 inhabitants, and was immediately followed by the small pox ; 2d. the earthquake of 1783, which though it destroyed only 700 or 800 lives, levelled half of the whole city with the ground.

Metelin, or Medillu, (an. Mytelene & Lesbos, also Lasia, Pelasgia, Ægina, Æthiope, & Macaria,) isl. Grecian Archipelago, on SW. coast of Natolia, near the gulf of Adramiti. Lon. 26. 14. E. Lat. 31. 20. N. Its dimensions are variously stated ; by some 36 miles long, and 12 broad ; by others 42 miles long, and 26 in extreme breadth. Sq. m. about 500. Pop. about 40,000, in about equal proportions of Greeks and Turks, with some Jews. The island is mountainous, the climate very fine, the soil fertile, the ground clothed in perpetual verdure and a most luxuriant vegetation. The staple production is oil ; figs and wool are also exported in small quantities. The Lesbian wine was anciently celebrated, but it is now rare and poor. Lesbos was one of the most celebrated islands of antiquity, but almost all remains of its grandeur are obliterated. The ancient inhabitants were distinguished for their voluptuousness, a character which attaches to the moderns. This island gave birth to Theophrastus, Pittacus, Alcæus, Sappho ; and in modern times the two brothers named Barbarossa. The chief towns, Castro, or Metelin and Molivo.

It contains a cathedral, 15 chh., 3 hospitals, an academy or provincial university, and a public library of 60,000 vols. It is situated at the conflux of the Seille and Moselle, and divided into Old and New Town. The Old town is large, but the streets are narrow. The houses, however, though old fashioned, are handsome. The New Town is likewise large, and of much more beauty than the former. Exclusive of its fortifications, it has three citadels. The manufactures consist of cotton, linen, woolen, muslin, gauze, &c., leather, starch, hair powder, artificial flowers, sweet meats, &c.—The Meszin, or the country round the city of Metz, is of tolerable fertility, and produces a little wheat. It was anciently a part of the kingdom of Austrasia, of which Metz was for a long time the capital, and the usual residence of the king.

Towns. Mexico is the capital. Vera Cruz and Acapulco are the principal seaports. The other principal towns not enumerated above, are Queretaro, Xalapa, Cholula, Chihuahua, Monterey, Cinaloa, and Campeachy.

Population. The population according to an imperfect enumeration in 1793, was 4,483,529; but estimated by Humboldt at the same time at 5,200,000; in 1803, at 5,800,000; and in 1808, at 6,500,000; by Malte-Brun in 1820 and a Spanish journal, at 7,550,000. The population is composed of 4 casts; 1st, whites, in number about 1,200,000; 2d, Indians, about 2,500,000; 3d, negroes, about 6,000; 4th, people of mixed extraction, about 2,400,000. The last are divided into 3 races, Mestizoes, Mulattoes, and Zambos; about seven-eighths being Mestizoes, descendants of whites and Indians. The whites consist of 2 classes; 1st, those born in Europe called Chapetones; 2d, those born in America called Creoles. Public offices have been granted chiefly to the former.

Religion. The religion is Roman Catholic, with one archbishop, 8 bishops, and about 14,000 clergy. The higher clergy are very rich. The income of the archbishop of Mexico, is computed at $100,000.

Education. Literature and science have made considerable progress. There are a university and a school of mines in the city of Mexico, and colleges in several places.

Face of the country. A remarkable peculiarity of the country is its great elevation. The lands on both coasts are low; thence there is a gradual rise till the country attains the elevation of from 6,000 to 8,000 feet, spreading out into immense plains, called table land, estimated to comprize three-fifths of the whole country. On these plains mountains occasionally rise, whose summits are covered with perpetual snow.

Mountains. The most elevated summits of the Cordilleras of Mexico, are Pococatepetl, Orizaba, Iztaccihuatl, Peak of Fraide, and Cofre de Perota. There are 5 volcanoes, Pococatepetl, Orizaba, Tustla, Jorullo, and Colima.

Rivers. Mexico suffers, in general, from the want of water and navigable rivers. The largest rivers are the Rio del Norte, Colorado, and Gila.

Climate. The climate on the sea coast is hot, and in the southern parts unhealthy; on the table land, at the elevation of 4, or 5,000 feet, mild and salubrious, the mean annual heat being 68° or 70°, and never varying more than about 9 degrees; the plains having an elevation of more than 7,000 feet, are called the cold region, the thermometer sometimes, though very rarely, falling several degrees below freezing point. In the coldest season the mean heat of the day in the city of Mexico, is from 55° to 70°; and in summer the thermometer seldom rises above 75°.

Soil and productions. A great part of the country is extremely fertile; but a considerable proportion of the high table land is destitute of vegetation. The productions are maize, wheat, fruits of various kinds, bananas, manioc, vanilla, cocoa, cochineal, sugar, indigo, log-wood, &c.

Mines. Mexico is one of the richest countries in the world in mineral productions, particularly silver, and a great part of the inhabitants are employed in the mines. The whole annual produce of the American mines is estimated by Humboldt at 43,500,000 dollars. According to Robinson the annual coinage of gold in Mexico, before the late interruptions, was $14,000,000; silver $50,000,000; Wilcox states the annual amount of gold & silver at $28,000,000. According to Humboldt the average annual produce of the mines of Mexico from 1771 to 1803, was $19,688,940. The quantity of silver is stated to be ten times greater than what is furnished by all the mines of Europe. The 3 richest mines are those of Guanaxuato, Catorce, and Zacatecas. The whole number of mining stations has been stated at upwards of 450.

Commerce. The commerce of Mexico with Spain is carried on almost entirely through the port of Vera Cruz, the annual exports of which, in time of peace are estimated by Humboldt at 21,000,000 dollars; metals 17,000,000; cochineal 2,400,000; sugar 1,300,000; flour 300,000; indigo 280,000.

History. Mexico was subdued by the Spaniards under Cortez in 1521. Montezuma was at that time emperor, and the inhabitants were considerably advanced in civilization. Since that time Mexico has been a province of Spain, governed by a viceroy. An insurrection commenced Sept. 15, 1810, at Dolores, in Durango. Since then the country has been in a revolutionary state, and in 1821, Feb. 24, a declaration of independence was made at Yguala.

Mexico, intendancy in the country of Mexico, bounded N. by St. Luis Potosi, E. by Puebla and Vera Cruz, S. by the Pacific ocean, and W. by Mechoacan and Guanaxuato. Lat. 16. 34. to 21. 57. N. Pop. 1,511,800. Square leagues 5,927. Two thirds of the country are occupied with mountains, in which are immense plains, elevated from 6,500 to 7,500 feet in height, with a very fertile soil. In the country bordering on the Pacific the climate is hot and very unhealthy.

Mexico, city, N. A. capital of Mexico, or New Spain, W. by N. Vera Cruz, and NNE. Acapulco, being 69 leagues in a right line from each. Lon. 99. 5. W. Lat. 19. 26. N. Pop. in 1803, according to Humboldt, 137,000, of whom 2,500 were Europeans, 65,000 Creoles, 33,000 Indians, 26,500 Mestizoes, and 10,000 Mulattoes. Abp. see. The original city of Mexico, or as it was called, Tenochtitlan, was founded by the Mexicans in 1325, situated on a group of islands in lake Tezcuco, in the valley of Mexico. It was taken by Cortez in 1521, after a siege of 75 days, during which, it is said, upwards of 100,000 Mexicans were slaughtered. The ancient Tenochtitlan, which was stated by Cortez to be as large as Seville or Cordova, was completely destroyed, and the present city has risen out of its ruins. It is situated on the same site, but owing to the diminution of the waters in lake Tezcuco, it stands on dry land, about a league distant from the lake. It is 7,470 feet above the level of the sea, nearly in the centre of the valley of Mexico, which is of an oval form, 18 1-2 leagues long, and 12 1-2 broad, containing 244 1-2 square leagues, 22 of which are occupied by the lakes, and surrounded with mountains, which enclose it like a wall.

With the exception of Petersburg, Berlin, and Philadelphia, there does not exist a city of the same extent, that can be compared with this for the uniform level of its site, and the breadth and regularity of its streets. It forms a square, extending from N. to S., and from E. to W., 4 miles. The streets intersect each other at right angles, and are very broad. The public places are of great extent, particularly the great square in the centre. The city is surrounded with a wall of uncemented stones. The architecture is generally in a fine style, and the public buildings are magnificent. Some of the most remarkable are the palace of the viceroy, the cathedral, treasury, the convents, the 2 great hospitals, prison, school of mines, botanic garden, the edifices of the university and public library, academy of fine arts, and the mint. The mint of Mexico is the largest and richest in the world, employing 350 or 400 workmen, and is capable of coining in a year 30,000,000 pieces. The amount of gold and silver coined, in 1820, was $10,406,154. The university is styled royal and pontifical, and the cloyster is composed of 250 doctors of all faculties. The city is said to contain upwards of 100 chb., 13 hospitals, 23 monasteries, and 15 nunneries.

The manufactures of the city, though not extensive, have latterly been on the increase. The working of gold and silver in its various branches, is carried to great perfection. The printing of calicoes and the manufacture of hard soap, tobacco, and cloth are carried on to some extent. Situated equidistant from the two principal ports of the country, Vera Cruz and Acapulco, it is the centre of a great commerce.—Great quantities of goods are transported from one port to the other through this city, & employ a vast number of horses and mules. A circumstance which at first sight arrests the attention of the traveller is the abundance of silver, gold, and jewels, exposed in plate and toys in the streets by shopkeepers and goldsmiths. The archbishop has an annual revenue of $100,000, and many of the citizens possess immense wealth. The most extreme wretchedness is also exhibited in the streets, where 20, or 30,000 wretches pass the night in open air.

Mexico is one of the finest cities in the world, and its general appearance is much heightened by the majestic character of the scenery with which it is surrounded. The estates in the valley about the town are in the highest state of cultivation, covered with gardens, orchards, and cultivated fields. This beautiful cultivation is finely contrasted by the wild appearance of the naked mountains which enclose the valley; the whole presenting from the towers of the cathedral a view of extraordinary beauty and grandeur.

Owing to its low situation, Mexico is exposed to the danger of inundation, from which it has several times suffered great injury. To avoid this danger an immense outlet through the mountains to the northeast was completed in 1789, one of the greatest hydraulic operations ever executed by man. The canal is more than 4 1-2 leagues in length, 278 to 360 feet in breadth at the top; and where deepest from 160 to 196 feet in perpendicular depth. The whole expense was calculated at 1,291,770*l*.

Michigan, lake, U. S. in Michigan Territory, and N. of the state of Indiana, 260 m. in length, and above 50 in breadth, containing, according to Hutchins, 10,368,000 acres. It is 900 feet deep, and its surface is 589 or 595 feet above the ocean. The distance from the southern extremity to the Mississippi, 161 miles. Lon. 84. 40. to 87. 8. W. Lat. 41. 15. to 45. 35. N. This lake, which has depth enough for vessels of any size has a communication with lake Huron, by the river or channel of Michilimackinack. The waters of this, as well as of the other great lakes, are clear and wholesome, and it contains several kinds of excellent fish. In the NW. part there are 2 large bays, Noquets and Green bays. The country adjacent either E. or W. of this lake is composed but of an indifferent soil except where brooks or rivers empty themselves into it; on the banks of these it is extremely fertile.

MICHIGAN TERRITORY, U.S. bounded N. by lake Superior, E. by St. Mary's river, lake Huron, St. Clair's river and lake, Detroit river, and lake Erie, S. by Ohio & Indiana, and W. by NW. Territory. The greater part consists of a large peninsula having lake Michigan on the west, and lake Huron, &c. on the east; 236 miles long from N. to S., and 174 miles, where widest, broad, containing about 34,600 sq. m. The other part lies west and north of lake Michigan; the western boundary being formed by a line drawn from the south end of lake Michigan on the west side, due north to lake Superior, including within the boundary the whole of the lake. Lon. 82. to 86. W. Lat. 41. 32. to 46. 39. N. Pop. in 1810, 4,762; in 1820, 8,396; 1,468 employed in agriculture, 392 in commerce, and 196 in manufactures.

Town. Detroit, the capital, is the only considerable town.

Lakes, bays, and rivers. Lake Michigan which lies within this territory, and the lakes and rivers which border upon it, form prominent features of the country. The country is indented by Saguna bay of lake Huron, Traverse bay on the east side of lake Michigan, and Green and Noquet's bays on the west side. The rivers are numerous, and generally navigable for boats nearly to their sources. Some of the principal ones are the Maumee, Raisin, Huron of Erie, Riviere aux Ecorces, Riviere Rouge, Huron of St. Clair, Belle Riviere, Pine river, Saguna, Grand-Traverse, Marguerite, Mastigon, Maramec, St. Joseph's, and Fox.

Face of the country and soil. The peninsula of Michigan is composed chiefly of table land resting upon a vast stratum of lime stone and argillaceous sand stone. The interior towards the sources of the rivers, is generally level and interspersed with lakes and morasses. An inclined plain about 20 miles in width, skirts the peninsula on the E. N. & W. sides. The rivers towards their sources have a sluggish current, but when they approach the declivity become more rapid, but generally become sluggish again a few miles above their mouths. In the interior, particularly towards the NW. there are extensive prairies; and marshes in many places border the mouths of the rivers; but more than 7-8ths of the whole peninsula is covered with a dense forest. The surface of the country along the eastern shore of lake Michigan, consists of sand hills, sometimes covered with stunted trees and a scanty vegetation, but generally bare, and thrown by the wind into an innumerable fantastic forms. This tract has been gained from the lake; and the land is still encroaching upon the water, every storm throwing up new quantities of alluvion. A large part of the soil is fertile, and well adapted to the purposes of agriculture. The principal settlements are in the southeast part; smaller settlements are at Michilimackinac in the north, and at Green bay west of the lake.

Productions. The forest trees are in great variety; oak, hickory, walnut, ash, linden, sugar maple, red maple, elm, poplar, pine, &c. Carbonate of lime is the most considerable mineral production that has been discovered. The fols avoine, (wild rice, or wild oats) is a valuable natural production, covering the marshes near the margins of the lakes and rivers. The soil is well adapted to wheat, rye, oats, barley, flax, hemp, garden vegetables, and grasses. No part of the U. S. is more abundantly supplied with fish, aquatic fowls, and wild game. The fish are of various kinds, but chiefly white fish and salmon trout, both of exquisite flavour.—The trout weigh from 10 to 70 pounds.

Commerce. This territory is very favourably situated for commerce, being almost surrounded by navigable waters, which are expected before long to be connected with the Mississippi on one hand, and the Hudson on the other. The vessels that navigate the lake usually carry from 10 to 60 tons. Detroit and Michilimackinac are ports of entry.

Climate. The climate is healthy, and usually accounted more mild than in similar parallels on the Atlantic.

Michilimackinac, called also Mackinaw, p-t. & military post, Michilimackinac co. Michigan, on an island, in the straits of the same name, which connect lakes Michigan and Huron; 180 NE. Green bay, 300 NNW. Detroit, W. W. 636. Lon. 84. 10. W. Lat. 45. 54. N. The island is about 9 miles in circ., and its name Michilimackinac, (Michi-Mackinaw, i.e. Great Turtle), was given to it on account of its form. The town is on the SE. side of the island on a small cove, which is surrounded by a steep cliff, 150 feet high. It consists of 2 streets parallel with the lake, intersected by others at right angles, and contains a court house, a jail, and about 100 houses, mostly small. It is much resorted to in the summer by fur traders; and during the same season it is visited by thousands of Indians, on their way to Drummond's island. On the cliff above the town is the fort, and 1-2 m. farther is another summit, 150 feet higher, 300 above the lake is Fort Holmes, from which there is an extensive prospect of lakes Michigan and Huron.

It is a large and handsome city, and the capital of the province of Zealand. The town house is a magnificent building, ornamented with a great number of the statues of the comtes and comtesses of Holland and Zealand; it was formerly a rich and celebrated abbey, founded in the year 1256. It has 6 Calvinist chh. and an athenæum or academy, which affords nearly the same course of instruction as a university. The fortifications of Middleburg were formerly very strong, but are not now kept in repair. It preserves its circular mound of earth, divided into bastions, and surrounded by a broad and deep ditch.

Pop. in 1810, 2,138; in 1820, 2,535. It has extensive manufactures and considerable trade. It contains a court house, a jail, 2 academies, one for males, and one for females, a college, 2 printing offices, from each of which is issued a weekly newspaper; 2 houses of public worship, 1 for Congregationalists, and 1 for Methodists.

The average width of the river through the town is 170 feet, and there are falls of 20 feet perpendicular, at the village, which affords seats for various mills, and manufacturing establishments. In the vicinity of the falls there are 2 cotton manufactories, 3 grist-mills, 2 saw-mills, a nail manufactory, and a manufactory for sawing marble. The cotton manufactories are both stone edifices; one 150 feet by 37, of 7 stories at one end, and 3 at the other, containing 1040 spindles for cotton, 20 power looms, 4 woollen carding machines, and 76 spindles for wool; the other is 58 feet in length, 32 in width, and 40 in height, and contains 600 spindles. Within a few feet of the marble manufactory is an inexhaustible quarry of excellent marble, which is wrought into tomb stones, tomb tables, hearths, jambs, mantle pieces, side-boards, &c., and transported to various parts of the country. The amount sold, in 1814, was 8,081 dollars, and in 1815, 7,018 dollars, and in 1819, 7,498. Besides these, there are various other manufactures in the village.

Middlebury College was incorporated in 1800. It is pleasantly situated on ground elevated 342 feet above lake Champlain, and is a respectable and flourishing seminary. The funds of the college are not large, having arisen solely from individual munificence. There are two college buildings; one of wood, 3 stories high, containing a chapel and 20 rooms for students, the other a spacious and elegant edifice of stone, 108 feet by 40, 4 stories high, containing 48 rooms for students. The college library contains upwards of 1,200 volumes. There are also belonging to societies composed of students, libraries, which together, contain upwards of 800 volumes. The philosophical apparatus is tolerably complete.

The board of trustees, styled "The President and Fellows of Middlebury College," is not limited as to number. It consists, at present, of 21 members. The executive government is composed of a president, and 5 professors; 1 of mathematics and natural philosophy, 1 of theology, and 1 of languages; a lecturer on chemistry, and 2 tutors. The number of students, in 1821, was 92.

The commencement is held on the 3d Wednesday in August. There are only two vacations; one from commencement 5 weeks; the other from the first Wednesday in January, 8 weeks.

Milan, late Duchy of, or Milanese, country, Italy, bounded N. by the Grisons, E. by the Venetian States, S. by the states of Piedmont and Parma, and W. by Piedmont and Savoy. Its greatest breadth from N. to S. is upwards of 100 miles, and its greatest length from E. to W. 103. It formed a part of the Cisalpine republic and kingdom of Italy, till in 1814 the Sardinian Milanese was restored to the king of Sardinia, and the remainder to Austria. This along with the duchy of Mantua and the Valteline, form the government of Milan in Austrian Italy, or the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom. It is divided into 9 delegations, viz. Milan, Como, Pavia, Lodi, Cremona, Mantua, Brescia, Bergamo, and Sondrio. Pop. 2,032,000. Sq. m. 3,340. This is one of the finest tracts in Europe, the greater part consisting of fertile valleys and luxuriant plains ; watered by the Po and its tributaries. The productions are wheat, rice, maize, vines, mulberries, &c. The pastures are excellent, and the cheese called Parmesan, made in the neighbourhood of Lodi, is very celebrated.
Sardinian Milanese, on the west, separated from the Austrian Milanese by the Ticino, is divided into 9 districts, viz. Alessandria, Mortana, Tortona, Voghera, Pallanza, Domo d'Ossola, Vigevanasco, Novara, and Sesia. Pop. 555,509. Sq. m. 3,279.
Milan, or Milano, (an. Mediolanum), city, Italy, capital of Austrian Italy, or the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, and of the government and delegation of Milan ; 65 N. Genoa, 75 ENE. Turin, 132 W. Venice, 145 NW. Florence, 280 NW. by N. Rome. Lon. 9. 12. E. Lat 45. 23. N. Pop. in 1808, 128,862 ; in 1820, 135, or 140,000. H. 13,000. Abp. see.
 It is situated on the small river Alona, in a beautiful plain, between the Ticino and Adda, with both which it is connected by canals. It is of a circular form, the circumference of the closely peopled part being about 5 miles, that of the outer walls about 10. It is an old city, built without much regard to regularity ; some of the streets are tolerably broad, but generally narrow and winding. The private houses are in general from 3 to 5 stories, tolerably built, but not very elegant. In sumptuous family mansions Milan is inferior to Rome, Genoa, and Florence, but its public edifices display all the richness and magnificence of Italian architecture. Of these the first is the cathedral, the grandest and most imposing specimen of Gothic architecture existing, and next to St. Peter's of Rome, and St. Paul's of London, the finest church in Europe. It is built of white marble; 490 feet long, 298 broad, and 260 feet high. The tower, in shape of an obelisk, is 400 feet high. It is crowded with elegant marble statues, said to amount, inside and out, to 4,000. It was begun in the 16th century, and is not yet completed.

Milan contains about 30 hospitals and charitable institutions. The Great Hospital is an immense edifice, capable of accommodating 1,500 patients. The great foundling hospital receives at least 4,000 children. There are 8 or 9 theatres mostly small, but that called the Scala rivals the famous theatre of Naples. A place of amusement, called the Arena, was constructed in 1806, in the outskirts of the city, for great spectacles. It is in imitation of the amphitheatre of the Romans, being as spacious, though less elevated than the famous amphitheatre of Verona, and capable of containing 30,000 spectators.

Among the literary institutions are the Ambrosian College, having a library of 100,000 vols. and 15,000 MSS., together with a fine gallery of paintings, statues, antiques, medals, and curiosities; the college of Brera, in which are taught physic, sculpture, architecture, painting, and engraving, and which has a very large library, an observatory, a gallery of paintings, a botanic garden, and a cabinet of 12,000 medals; the Swiss College; an academy of arts and sciences, academies of sculpture, architecture, and agriculture, a cabinet of natural history, and a museum.—The number of churches has been stated at 230, 61 of which are parochial. A number of years since there were 50 monasteries and 62 nunneries. In 1818, 4 newspapers were published here.

Milan is a place of considerable trade and manufacture. The manufactures consist of silk, porcelain, earthen ware, leather, paper, printed cottons, snuff, tobacco, embroidery in gold and silver, &c. The fertility of the neighbouring territory in fruits, grain, and pasturage, affords abundant supplies both for consumption in the city and for export.

Mingrelia, country, Asia, anciently a part of Colchis; bounded N. by Circassia, E. and SE. by Imiretta, S. by Guriel, and W. by the Black sea and Abascia. It extends along the Black sea about 140 miles, and 40 or 50 inland. It has few towns worthy of notice. Some of them are Zalikana, Rhezia, Rugh, and Egers. The inhabitants are sunk in poverty, ignorance, and barbarism; handsome in their persons; turbulent and predatory. Their chief commerce is in slaves. Their prince is called dadian, and has fluctuated between a dependence on the Turks and Russians. The country is fertile, covered with forests; watered by the Phasis, and about 30 other rivers. It produces good vines, fruit, honey, and silk. The earth is in general too soft to bear well the operation of the plough.—The principal food of the inhabitants is gom, a small grain like millet; bread of wheat is used only by the prince and nobility. This country was originally rich in gold, and the Argonauts from hence fetched the golden fleece. Ancient Colchis, of which Mingrelia forms a part, is said to have contained a great number of cities and towns, of which, however, at present no vestiges remain.

Mississippi, derived according to some from Namæsi Sipu, i. e. River of Fish, and according to others from Missi Sepe, i.e. Great River, in the Aloganquin language; r. U. S., and one of the greatest in America. Its highest source is not well ascertained. According to Schoolcraft it rises from Beesh lake, Lon. 96. 40. W. Lat. 49. N., and after a course of about 600 miles, reaches the falls of St. Anthony in Lat. 44.15.N. It forms a junction with the Missouri in Lat. 38. 50. N., and it flows into the Gulf of Mexico by several mouths, the principal of which, called the Balize, is in Lon. 89. 30. W. Lat. 29. 6.N. This river overflows its banks every spring and lays the country, for many miles in extent, under water. Its general width is from 900 to 1,000 yards; at Natchez 862 yards. Its depth is great, not accurately ascertained, but stated from 20 to 30 fathoms. The navigation is rendered difficult and dangerous by falling banks, trees, logs, and other obstructions. Vessels are from 5 to 30 days on their passage up to New Orleans, though with a favourable wind they will sometimes descend in 12 hours. From New Orleans to the Illinois, the voyage requires 8 or 10 weeks. Boats of 40 tons ascend to St. Anthony's Falls; but ships seldom ascend above Natchez. The navigation is greatly facilitated by steam boats, by which voyages are performed in a third of the time required for other vessels. The first steam boat on the western waters, was built at Pittsburg, in 1811; in 1819, there were 50, carrying 7,306 tons. They are employed with great advantage, and their number is rapidly increasing. The principal towns on the Mississippi are New Orleans, Natchez, and St. Louis.

The whole length of the Mississippi including its windings is usually estimated at 3,000 miles; some however make it less. The length above its junction with the Missouri is upwards of 1,600 miles. The length of the Missouri above the junction, is 3,096 miles. The Missouri being both longer and larger, may properly be considered the main river. On this principle the following table is constructed, exhibiting a view of the principal tributaries of this unrivalled stream. The first column expresses the distance of one junction from the preceding, the second the distance of the junction from the entrance into the gulf of Mexico by the course of the stream, and the third the estimated length of the tributary river.

The above distances from the mouth of the Mississippi to the conjunction of the Missouri, are given according to Mr. Darby. Above the junction the distances are given according to Lewis and Clark. The principal rivers that flow into the Mississippi above the junction with the Missouri, are the Illinois, Moines, Ouisconsin, and St. Peter's. The whole extent of country drained by the Mississippi, Missouri, and their tributaries, is computed at upwards of 1,200,000 sq. m.

MISSISSIPPI, one of the U.S., erected into a state in 1817; bounded N. by Tennessee, E. by Alabama, S. by the Gulf of Mexico and Louisiana, and W. by Pearl and Mississippi rivers, which separate it from the state of Louisiana. Lon. 80. 30. to 81. 35. W. Lat. 30. 10. to 35. N.; 339 miles long from N. to S., and 150 from E. to W. Sq. m. 45,760. Mississippi and Alabama were united till 1817. Pop. of both, in 1800, 8,850; in 1810, 40,352. Pop. of Mississippi alone in 1816, 45,929; in 1820, 75,448; white males 23,286; white females 18,390; slaves 32,814. Persons engaged in agriculture 22,033; in manufactures 650; in commerce 294. Militia 5,292.

Towns. Columbia, a small town on Pearl river, is the seat of government. Natchez is much the largest town. The other most considerable towns are Washington, Port Gibson, Monticello, and Shieldsborough.

Religion. The principal denominations are Methodists, Baptists, and Presbyterians.—Colleges or academies have been established at Washington and Shieldsborough.

Rivers. The Mississippi forms the western boundary, for a distance, by the course of the river, of 530 miles. The other principal rivers are the Pearl, Pascagoula, Yazoo, Black, Homochitto, Tennessee, and the western branches of the Tombigbee.

Face of the country and soil. This state has a very confined sea-coast of about 30 miles in extent, having no inlet except by the Pascagoula, for vessels of the smallest size. A chain of low sandy islands lies 6 or 7 miles from the shore; Malheureux or Unfortunate islands, Mary Anne, Cat, Ship, Dog, Horn, and Petite Bois islands. The southern part, along the gulf of Mexico, embracing more than half of the surface of the state, is a sandy, level, pine forest. Advancing north the country becomes hilly and broken, though there are no elevations that can be called mountains. A tract of country, called the Mississippi bluffs, lies between Lat. 31. & 35. N. These bluffs reach the channel of the river in a few places only, as at Loftus Heights, Walnut Hills, &c. They are an extension of the comparatively elevated surface of the state, over the low grounds of the river Mississippi. Their elevation is various, but estimated generally at about 100 feet. They have an excellent soil. The alluvial land on the rivers, where not liable to be overflowed, is the most valuable land in the state. The whole quantity of bluff lands and river alluvion in the Mississippi, is estimated at 5,560 sq. m. These lands, in a state of nature, are covered with a very dense forest.

Productions. Cotton is the staple production. The soil is well adapted to indigo, tobacco, Indian corn, sweet potatoes, various garden vegetables, and fruits.

Climate. The winters are mild, but very variable. Frost sometimes destroys the cotton, indigo, tobacco, and other tender plants as early as the first week in October; while in other years the flowers of the same vegetables will be found blooming in January. No winter passes without frost, and few without snow at Natchez.

Indians. The Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians possess nearly one half of the territory of this state, embracing the northern and northeastern parts. These Indians possess some of the finest tracts in the state, abounding in extensive and beautiful prairies.

Missouri, r. N.A., which rises in the Rocky Mountains, and uniting with the Mississippi, flows into the Gulf of Mexico. The three head branches are Jefferson's, Madison's and Gallatin's rivers, which are navigable for some distance, and unite at one point, about Lon. 110. W. Lat. 45. 10. N. The following table of distances is taken from Lewis & Clark's travels; and the distance, from the junction with the Mississippi to Gulf of Mexico, from Schultz. The distance from the junction to the gulf of Mexico, according to Darby, is only 1,273, or 1,234, and the distances stated by Lewis & Clark, have been supposed to be exaggerated.

The only interruption of the navigation, thro' this whole distance, is at the Great Falls. At these falls the river descends, in the space of 18 miles, 357 feet. The greatest cascade is 87 feet perpendicular, and exhibits a view of singular beauty and grandeur. There is another pitch of 47 feet.—About 100 miles below these falls there are natural walls of stone, in several places on the banks of the river. They rise 200 or 300 feet high, nearly perpendicular, exhibit a most extraordinary and romantic appearance, and are regarded as a great curiosity.—The place where the river makes its escape from the mountains, called the "Gates of the Rocky Mountains," presents an object of extraordinary curiosity.

For the distance of 5 3-4 m. the rocks rise perpendicularly from the water's edge nearly 1,200 feet. The river is here compressed to the width of 150 yards, and for the first three miles, there is but one spot, and that of only a few yards, on which a man could stand between the water and the perpendicular ascent of the mountain.—From the Mississippi to the Great Falls, the Missouri is not difficult of navigation, but above the falls the navigation is considerably obstructed by rocks and rapid currents. The breadth of this river at its junction with the Mississippi, is from half to three quarters of a mile; its waters are very turbid & muddy. See Mississippi.

MISSOURI, one of the U.S. bounded W. and N. by the territory of Missouri, E. by the Mississippi, which separates it from Illinois, Kentucky, and Tennessee, and S. by Arkansas Territory. The boundary line beginning at the mouth of the Des Moines, proceeds up the river to the rapids, thence due W. till it meets the meridian that passes through the mouth of the Kansas, thence due S. down that meridian to the parallel of Lat. 36. 30. N., thence due E. to St. Francis river, down that river to the parallel of Lat. 36. N., thence due E. to the Mississippi. Lon. 89. to 94. 10. W. Lat. 36. to 40. 26. N. Mean length from N. to S. 280; mean breadth from E. to W. 220. Sq. m. 63,000. Pop. in 1810, exclusive of Arkansas, 19,833; in 1820, 66,586; slaves 10,222. Towns. The seat of government has been lately fixed at Jefferson on the Missouri. St. Louis is the largest town. The other most considerable towns are Franklin, St. Charles, St. Genevieve, Jackson, Potosi, and Herculaneum.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Missouri, Mississippi, Osage, Merrimack, Grande, Charlatan, Gasconade, St. Francis, Black, & Salt rivers.

Mines and Minerals. The lead mines are very extensive and rich. Iron ore is found in large quantities in Bellevue and various other places. Coal, red chalk, antimony, zinc, arsenic, ochre, salt, nitre, gypsum, steatite, plumbago, porphyry, jasper, chalcedony, barytes, pumice, &c. are also found.

Mine District. The district of country which is characterised by affording lead ore, lies south of the Merrimack, and comprises the counties of Washington, St. Genevieve, Jefferson, and Madison, consisting of about 3,150 sq. m. Its general aspect is rolling, like a body of water in gentle agitation; the soil is indifferent; much of it sterile, interspersed with fertile valleys; and the climate healthy. The country is watered by the Merrimack and St. Francis, and abounds in streams which afford an abundance of excellent mill seats. The two places from which the lead is exported are St. Genevieve and Herculaneum. Potosi and St. Michael are towns situated among the mines. The number of mines now worked is about 30. The most important are Mine au Burton, Mine La Motte, Mine Shibboleth, and Richwood's Mines. The quantity of lead obtained yearly, in 1817 and 1818, was estimated at about 4,000,000 lbs. The number of persons engaged in mining is estimated at 1,100.

Face of the country. The face of the country is greatly diversified. Alluvial or bottom land is found in the rivers; receding from them, the land rises, sometimes almost imperceptibly, sometimes very abruptly, into elevated barrens, and rocky ridges. In the interior may often be seen, at one view, bottoms and barrens, naked hills and prairies, heavy forests and streams of water, succeeding each other with rapidity, and presenting a variegated and beautiful landscape. Though there is much high land, yet there are no elevated mountains.

Soil. The soil is generally very rich or very poor. The lands in this state bordering on the Missouri are exceedingly rich. Excellent land is found also on the other rivers, though much of it is subject to inundation & unfit for cultivation. At a distance from the rivers the land is generally poor, but affords numerous ores. The part of the state lying north of the Missouri, about one third of the whole, is much the best in regard to soil.

Productions. Wheat, Indian corn, rye, oats, barley, flax, hemp, tobacco, hops, sweet potatoes, white clover, timothy, blue grass, various garden vegetables and fruits.

Forest Trees. The forest trees are walnut, hickory, various kinds of oak, locust, ash, cotton wood, papaw, coffee nut, sycamore, elm, maple, hackberry, box, &c.

Wild Fruits. The following wild fruits are found, most of them in great abundance; grapes, filberts, red plum, persimmon, cherry, black haws, thornberry, walnut, mulberry, hackberry, hazlenut, strawberry, blackberry, whortleberry, crab apple, gooseberry, and papaw.

Climate. The climate is remarkably serene and healthy, but subject to extremes of heat and cold. The degree of cold is said to be greater than in the same parallels on the Atlantic coast, but a smaller quantity of water falls either in the form of snow or rain.

Curiosities. Mounds similar to those on the Ohio and its branches, are found in Missouri, near St. Louis and on the bottom lands. Those near St. Louis are large and very high. Numerous caves have been discovered, some of great extent, which yield earth strongly impregnated with nitre.

Missouri Territory, country, belonging to the U. S., forming the greater part of the Louisiana purchase, bounded N. by the British possessions, E. by the Mississippi, which separates it from the NW. Territory and the state of Illinois; and by the state of Missouri, S. by the territory of Arkansas, SW. by Mexico, and W. by the Rocky mountains. It is a vast wilderness, inhabited only by Indians, with the exception of a few military posts formed by the U. S. It is watered by the Missouri and its branches. All the principal branches flow into the river on the SW. side; viz. the Osage, Kansas, Platte, Quicourre, Chayenne, and Yellow Stone. The country, generally, except the margin of the rivers, is entirely devoid of timber. There are few regions on the globe of equal extent, which afford so little for the support of man. It is a wide arid waste in summer, & over which in winter the piercing winds of the north sweep without obstruction. From the elevation of some parts, the northern position of others, and the open exposure of nearly the whole extent, the winters are extremely severe. The country bears a striking resemblance to the steppes of Central Asia, and like those steppes, it must forever remain destitute of a dense population. The most valuable portions are in the south-eastern and eastern parts, and on the banks of the large rivers. Buffaloes in immense herds, and other wild animals abound.—See Louisiana, and Indians.

Missouri, Indians, now united with the Ottos.

Missouri, (Little), r. Louisiana, which runs into the Missouri 1,690 miles from the Mississippi. Length about 500 miles.

It contains 3 Luth. chh. 2 Greek, 1 Cath. and 1 Calvinist; 2 hospitals, and an academical gymnasium with a library. The manufactures are linen, leather, stockings, and soap. It is situated on the river Aa, in that part of Courland called Semigallia. It is an extensive town, but within its circuit contains a great many gardens and open places or areas. The houses, for the most part, have no elegance; and the walls and moats of the town are decayed. The palace, built by the late duke, is a great pile of building. The masonic lodge of this city, has a library of 16,000 volumes.

New-Orleans, W. 1,036. Lon. 88. 21. W. Lat. 30. 40. N. Pop. in 1813, about 140 whites, exclusive of those connected with the garrison, and a somewhat larger number people of colour; in 1818, 1,127; 604 whites; in 1822, estimated at 2,800. It contains a court house, a jail, a bank, 2 printing offices, 2 houses of public worship, one Protestant, the other Catholic; 6 wharfs, 110 stores and ware houses, and 240 dwelling-houses. The buildings are generally of wood, and those recently erected, are mostly of 2 stories. The site is on a beautiful and extensive plain, elevated about 15 feet above the level of high tides, and open to refreshing breezes from the bay, of which it commands a handsome prospect. The streets are generally of good width, and most of them intersect each other at right angles. The approach to the harbour, for vessels drawing more than 8 feet of water, is circuitous and difficult. Within a low grassy island, which lies opposite to the town, there is a good shelter for vessels.

Mobile was first settled about 1700. It was taken possession of by the U.S. in 1813, at which time it contained about 100 houses, mostly mean decaying wooden buildings of one story. It was incorporated as a city in 1819, and has become a place of flourishing commerce. During the year ending Sept. 30, 1821, 25,390 bales of cotton were shipped from this port. The number of clearances, in 1818, was 274, and of entrances, including barges and keel boats, 360. The value of importations was estimated at upwards of $3,000,000. The shipping belonging to this district, in 1818, amounted to 2,216 tons.

Mobile, r. Alabama, which is formed by the union of the Alabama and Tombigbee, 40 miles above the city of Mobile. Three miles below the junction it divides, and flows into Mobile bay by several channels. The main western channel is called Mobile, the main eastern channel, Tensaw.—Mobile bay is 30 miles long, and 12 in average breadth. Dauphin island lies at its mouth, with a channel on each side; the eastern having 18 feet water, the western only 5. Mobile receives the united waters of the Alabama, Tombigbee, Black Warrior, Cahawba, Coosa, Tallapoosa, which water a very fertile country.

Mobile Island, island, formed by the divided stream of the river Mobile, about 26 miles long, and 5 wide. Lon. 87. 55. W. Lat. 31. N.

Mocha, or Mochha, city & s-p. Arabia, in Yemen. Lon. 43. 10. E. Lat. 13. 16. N. Pop. stated by Lord Valentia at only 5,000; by others at 18, or 20,000. Mocha is the principal port on the Red sea, and the channel through which almost all the intercourse of Europe with this part of the world is carried on. It was founded about 4 centuries ago, in a most dreary situation, in a plain bounded by mountains, consisting entirely of arid sand. The climate is intensely hot, in consequence of a SE. wind blowing 8 months in the year from over the burning sands of Africa.

The town makes a handsome appearance from the sea, the buildings being white washed, and the 3 minarets of considerable height; but on entering it the streets are found to be dirty and the houses meanly built, and many of them decayed. It is enclosed by a wall, 16 feet high on the sea side, and on the land side, more than 30. Mocha is famous for its coffee, which is its chief article of export, and of unrivalled excellence. Other articles of commerce are gum arabic, myrrh, frankincense, senna, balm of Gilead or of Mecca, &c.

Mohawk, r. N. Y., which rises about 20 N. Rome. It passes by Rome, Utica, Schenectady, &c. and flows into the Hudson by 3 mouths between Waterford and Troy. Its length from Rome to the Hudson is about 117 miles. It is connected with Wood Creek by a canal 1 1-2 miles long. There are also canals at German Flats and Herkimer. A boat navigation has been opened for several years from Schenectady through the Mohawk, Wood Creek, Oneida lake, and Oswego river, to the lake Ontario. The Erie or Western canal, now making, is laid out along the south bank of this river from its mouth to Rome.

The Mohawk about 2 miles west of the Hudson, has remarkable falls, called Cahoes, or Cohoes. The river just above the falls, is between 300 and 400 feet wide, and descends at high water in one sheet, nearly 70 feet perpendicular. About 3-4 m. below, a bridge is erected across the river, from which there is a most sublime and beautiful view of the cataract.

Molucca Islands, islands in the E. Indian sea, first discovered by the Portuguese, in 1511, but in the possession of the Dutch. These valuable islands, strictly speaking, consist of no more than five, viz. Ternate, Timor or Motir, Tidor, Machian, and Bachian; but Amboyna, Bourro, Ceram, and several others, are now included in the name of Moluccas. The five former are not out of sight of each other, and lie all of them within the compass of 75 miles. They are famous for producing several sorts of valuable spices, but especially nutmegs and cloves, and are hence called Spice islands. Their coasts are rendered very dangerous by sands and shelves.

Mombaca, or Mombaso, km. Africa, near the coast of the Indian sea, S. of Melinda; the extent toward the S. & W. is not well known.—The soil is exceedingly fruitful, and produces rice, millet, and other grain; variety of fruit trees, and other vegetables and esculents; here are also bred vast quantities of cattle, and variety of poultry; and the country abounds with excellent springs of fresh water. The climate temperate; the air healthy.

The capital was on a peninsula, which has been turned into an island, by cutting a canal through the isthmus, in such a manner, that one part of it covers the city, so that it is not seen till we enter the port. The houses are built of stone, cemented with mortar, and embellished with curious paintings, and other ornaments; the streets straight, though narrow; and the houses contiguous, and terraced on the tops. Mont Blanc, summit of the Pennine Alps, and the highest mountain in Europe, in Savoy, on the borders of Switzerland, between the valleys of Chamouni and Entreves. The following measurements of its elevation are deemed the most accurate; by M. Deluc, 15,302 above the level of the sea; M. Pictet, 15,520; Sir George Schuckburgh, 15,662; M. Saussure, 15,670; M. Tralles, 15,730. It is discernible from Dijon and Langres, 140 miles distant. It receives its name from the immense mantle of snow with which its summit and sides are covered, and which is estimated to extend not less than 12,000 feet, without the least appearance of rock to interrupt its glaring whiteness. An ascent to the summit was first made in 1768; various attempts have been made since, four or five only of which have been successful. The ascent is particularly hazardous and toilsome.

Monte Video, or St. Felipe, city, Buenos Ayres, capital of a province formerly of the same name, now called Banda Oriental ; 120 ENE. Buenos Ayres. Lon. 56. 14. W. Lat. 34. 55. S. Pop. estimated in 1813, at 10,000. The population was formerly stated at 30,000, but it has been reduced during the late contest. It is situated on N. side of the La Plata, 90 miles above its mouth, and built on a peninsula. It derives its name from a mountain that overlooks the place, and on which is a light house that has an extensive view. The harbour has a very soft bottom of deep mud, and is so shallow as not to be generally safe for vessels of more than 300 or 400 tons, and is open to the violent western winds, called pamperos, yet it is the best on the La Plata. The town makes a handsome appearance from the harbour, being built on an ascent. The houses are of stone and brick, mostly of only one story. The streets are unpaved, the climate moist, the summer heat great, and violent storms of thunder, lightning, and heavy rain common. The chief trade is in hides, tallow, and dried beef. The country around, though fertile, is uncultivated. It wants trees, and wood is so scarce that the houses are floored with brick. The property of the inhabitants in the vicinity consists chiefly in cattle.

Monte di Viterbo, (an. Mons Cyllenius), mt. Popedom, in the Patrimonio. This mountain is very high, and the ascent at first pretty difficult; however, it afterwards grows easier: it is almost covered with sycamore trees. It was anciently an entire forest, called Cimmerian Forest, and so thick set with trees, that no person, till Quintus Fabius Maximus, dared to enter it.

shire town of the county. The village of Montpelier was incorporated in 1818. It is situated in the SW. part of the township, and contains a commodious state house built of wood, an elegant Congregational meeting house of brick, a court house, a jail, an academy, 2 paper mills, 2 carding machines, 2 clothiers' works, a printing office, and about 100 dwelling houses, the most of which are handsomely built. It is a flourishing village, and has considerable trade. The site on which it is built is low, being surrounded by hills of considerable height; and it has been, though rarely, inundated by the river. It is situated within 10 m. of the centre of the state, and is a great thoroughfare, the travel passing through it in various directions.

Montpellier, city, France, capital of Herault; 30 posts ENE. Toulouse, 55 1-2 S. Paris. Lon. 3. 53. E. Lat. 43. 36. N. Pop. 32,814. Bp. see. It is situated 5 miles from the sea, between the small rivers, Masson and Lez, on a declivity. Many of the streets are steep and irregular, and in the interior of the town, they are winding, narrow, and dark. In the suburbs are the most regular streets, and the best houses. The buildings are mostly of stone. It contains a cathedral, 19 Cath. chh., 1 Ref. ch., and 3 hospitals.

Montpellier has long been the seat of a celebrated university, particularly famous for its school of medicine. This still subsists under the name of an academy, and has 3 faculties.—The anatomical theatre is capable of containing 2,000 persons. Other establishments are a botanic garden, museum, cabinet of natural history and anatomy, the observatory, and public library of 42,000 vols.

It is defended by a citadel, which commands the town and neighbourhood. The principal manufacture is verdigris, in which it carries on a considerable trade, as also in wool, which is brought from the Mediterranean; wine, aquavite, Hungary water, cinnamon water, capillaire, essence of Bergamot, lemons, &c.; and likewise great quantities of woollen carpets, fustians, and silk stockings. These commodities are sent by the canal to Cette, which is the seaport of Montpellier.

This town is particularly celebrated for the salubrity of its air, and for its extensive and interesting prospects, which, on the one hand, embrace the Pyrenees, and on the other, the Alps. It is much visited by invalids from foreign countries.

Montreal, t. Lower Canada, the second in rank in the province, in a district of the same name, 180 miles above Quebec, 200 below lake Ontario, 243 N. Albany, 300 N. by W. Boston. Lon. 73. 35. W. Lat. 45. 31. N. Pop. in 1809, estimated at 16,000 ; in 1821, 18,767. H. 2,274. It is situated on S. side of the island of Montreal, in the St. Lawrence, at the head of ship navigation. The harbour, though not large, is always secure for shipping during the time the navigation of the river is open, and vessels drawing 15 feet water can lie close to the shore. The general depth of water is from 3 to 4 1-2 fathoms. The greatest inconvenience is the rapid of St. Mary, about a mile below, whose current is so powerful that without a strong NE. wind, vessels cannot stem it.

Montreal is divided into Upper and Lower towns, one, however, is but little elevated above the other. The streets are for the most part laid out in a regular manner ; generally rather narrow ; but the new ones are of convenient width. The houses are mostly built of greyish stone, with the roofs covered with sheet iron or tin ; many of them large, handsome, and in a modern style ; seldom of more than 2 stories. The streets have a dull uniformity, and the city has heretofore been described by travellers as of an extremely heavy and gloomy appearance, but has of late been much improved, and may now be styled tolerably handsome.

The principal public buildings are the general hospital, the Hotel Dieu, the convent of Notre Dame, the French cathedral, the English church, the old monastery of Franciscans converted into barracks, the college, the seminary, the court house, the government house, bank, &c. Montreal is the grand depot of the greatest company of N. America, who carry on the fur trade, and whose concerns are of vast extent and importance. It is also the channel through which the commerce is carried on between Canada and the U.S.—A canal from Montreal to La Chine was commenced in 1821. The district of Montreal is divided into 10 counties.

Montreal, isl. Lower Canada, in the St. Lawrence, at the confluence of Ottawa river ; 32 miles long, and 10 1-2 broad. It forms the county of Montreal, and is divided into 9 parishes. With some exceptions, it exhibits a level surface, extremely fertile, producing all kinds of grain, various vegetables, and fruits. In the neighbourhood of Montreal there are 2 or 3 considerable mountains ; the largest is 1 mile distant from the city. The base is surrounded with neat country houses and gardens ; the remainder covered with lofty trees. The view from this elevation embracing the city, river, and a wide expanse of country, is exceeding grand.

It is situated near the mouth of the South Esk, on a flat sandy peninsula, formed by the river and the German ocean. It is neatly built, consisting of a fine spacious main street, with several cross streets ; but many of the houses have their gables turned to the street. It contains a town hall, lunatic hospital, a bank, a theatre, 2 printing offices, a public library of 5,000 vols., and other public institutions. It has a commodious harbour, with considerable commerce. The shipping belonging to the town, in 1819, was about 8,000 tons, employed chiefly in the coasting & Baltic trade. The most important export is corn. It has some considerable manufactures; the principal branch is linen.

Montserrat, isl. West-Indies, discovered by Columbus, in 1493; about 9 miles long, and nearly as much wide; of an oval form. It is divided into two parishes, and is supposed to contain 30,000 acres, of which two thirds are very mountainous, or very barren. The island, as to its climate, soil, animals and commerce, is pretty much the same with the other English Caribbean islands. The mountains produce cedars, cypress-trees, the iron-tree, with other woods, and some odoriferous shrubs. It is well watered and fruitful; and the planters here formerly raised a great quantity of indigo. The seas abound with fish. Lon. 62. 17. W. Lat. 16. 45. N. In 1805, there were 1,000 whites, 250 people of colour, and 9,500 slaves.

Morea, the ancient Peloponnesus, peninsula, Eu. Turkey, situated south of the continent of Greece, with which it is connected by the isthmus of Corinth; in all other directions surrounded by the sea. It is included in the Turkish government of Romania, and is divided into 2 sangiacats, Tripolitza and Misitra. Sp. m. 13,060. Pop. not exceeding 400,000, more than 3-4ths Greeks. Chief towns Tripolitza, Misitra, Argos, Coron, Modon, Patras, Napoli di Romania, Napoli di Malvasia, and Navarin. Peloponnesus in more ancient times, called Egiptea, Apia, and Pelasia, contained the following small kingdoms; Achaia, Argolis, Arcadia, Laconia, Messenia, Elis, and Sicyonia.

The general aspect of the country is mountainous, interspersed with beautiful valleys and plains; the soil generally fertile, but badly cultivated; the productions corn, oil, wine, currants, silk, cotton, wool, honey, bees-wax, and fruits; the climate mild, generally salubrious, but in some parts unhealthy: the rivers numerous, but small; the largest, the Alpheus, Eurotas, and Pamisos. The Morea is well situated for trade, and has a number of gulfs and bays along its coasts. It is said to derive its name from Morus, a mulberry tree, either from its shape resembling that of a mulberry leaf, or from the great number of mulberry trees which it produces.

MOROCCO, (part of ancient Mauretania), large km. Africa, comprising the NW. part, bounded N. by the Straits of Gibraltar and the Mediterranean, E. by Algiers, S. by Sahara, and W. by the Atlantic. About Lon. 1. to 10. W. Lat. 29. to 36. N. Sq. m. according to Graberg, 290,000. The limits and divisions are not well ascertained. It is divided into 2 parts by the great chain of the Atlas, which traverses it first from E. to W. and then from N. to S., leaving between itself and the sea a plain of from 50 to 100 miles in breadth. This plain, which is 400 or 500 miles in length in an oblique line, includes all the populous and fertile part, comprising Morocco Proper and Fez. The division beyond the Atlas, comprises Darah, Tafilet, Sugulmessa, &c.

Population. The population is variously estimated ; by Graberg at 5,000,000 ; by Chenier and Hoest at 5, or 6,000,000 ; and by Jackson at 14,886,000. Pop. of the cities according to Jackson 995,000 ; of Morocco and Fez, north and west of Atlas, 10,300,000 ; the Brebers 3,000,000 ; Tafilet, south east of Atlas, 650,000. This statement is said to have been taken from the imperial register, but is probably a great exaggeration.

Towns. The chief towns are Morocco, the capital, Fez, Mequinez, Mogador, the principal seaport, Tarudant, Rabat, Sallee, Tangiers, Saffet, and Tetuan. The government is a most barbarous despotism. The religion is Mahometan ; but Jews are numerous in the cities, and engross all the commerce.

Face of the country, &c. The grand physical characteristic of the country is the great chain of the Atlas, the summits of which are covered with perpetual snow. The country between this chain and the ocean is watered by numerous streams from the mountains ; is exuberantly fertile, producing grain, almonds, dates, and various other fruits. Silk and wool are plentiful.

The famous leather, called Morocco, is manufactured from the skins of the goats of Tafilet.—Morocco has mines of iron, tin ; copper in abundance ; antimony more carefully worked than the others ; and mineral salt in great plenty. See Barbary.

Morocco proper contains the provinces of Siedma, Zerrara, Duquella, Tedla, Abda, Haha, Sus, and Erhanna.

Morocco, (called by the natives Marasch), city, & capital of the kingdom of Morocco. Lon. 7. 15. W. Lat. 31. 37. N. Pop. according to Chenier about 30,000 ; some reduce it 20,000 ; others state at 40, or 50,000 ; Jackson raises it to 270,000. It is said to contain 2,000 Jewish families. It is situated about 120 miles from the sea, in a pleasant plain, planted with palm trees. It was founded in 1052, A. D. and in the following century, under the reign of Ali Ben Yusuf, it was in its highest prosperity, and has been represented as containing a population of 1,000,000. This is probably very much exaggerated, but the circuit of its walls appears still calculated for at least 300,000. It is now very much depopulated, covered with ruins of houses and gardens ; the streets are filled with the rubbish of decayed buildings ; and the habitations, being old, swarm with vermin. The temples, sanctuaries, and mosques are still numerous, and some of the latter lofty and splendid. The emperor's palace is of hewn stone, ornamented with marble. The air is clear and healthy, and the city is well supplied with excellent water from the river Tensift, which flows at a short distance.

It is supposed to be ancient Saguntum, destroyed by Hannibal, and which fell a victim to its fidelity to the Romans. The inhabitants made a resistance of 8 months, and not receiving the succours they expected from their allies, fed upon the flesh and blood of their children, and afterwards turned their rage against themselves: they erected an immense pile of wood, and after setting fire to it, precipitated themselves, their women, slaves, and treasures, into the flames; so that instead of a lucrative conquest, Hannibal found nothing but a heap of ashes.—The city of Morviedro is full of the remains of antiquity; the walls of the houses, the city gates, and doors of the churches and inns, are covered with Roman inscriptions. The most curious monuments are the castle and the theatre.

Kaluga and Tula, and W. by Smolensk; about 100 miles long, and 92 broad. Sq. m. 10,040. Pop. stated from 1,090,000 to 1,253,000. It is watered by the Oka, Moskva, and Kliasma; is one of the most populous provinces of the empire; divided into 13 circles.

Moscow, (in Russian Moskva,) city, Eu. Russia, capital of a government to which it gives name, formerly the capital of the Russian empire, and now of the interior part, though not the residence of the court; 350 SE. Petersburg, 600 ENE. Warsaw, 900 E. by N. Vienna. Lon. 37. 33. E. Lat. 55.46. N. Pop. in summer about 200,000; in winter 300,000. Abp. see. It is situated on both sides of the Moskva, and including the suburbs, is about 24 miles in circuit. It consists of 4 successive divisions, circular or semi-circular, each surrounded by the other. 1. The Kremlin and Kitaigorod. The Kremlin stands on a height, and contains the ancient palace of the czars, the church of St. Michael's containing the tombs of the ancient czars, the church of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, where the emperors are crowned, and various other churches and monasteries. The Kitaigorod, or Chinese town, contains a number of bazars and shops, and has also a number of public buildings; among others a strong brick edifice for the public archives, and the university. 2. The Bielo-gorod, or White town, extends round the central part like a half moon, and has several wide streets, but no remarkable public building, except the arsenal and cannon foundry. 3. The Semliano-gorod, or Earthentown, is much more extensive than either of the preceding. It has wide streets, and derived its name from the earthen ramparts by which it was formerly defended. 4. The Slobodes, or suburbs, nearly 30 in number, surround the city, occupying a great extent of ground, and look like so many mean detached villages. Fires are of very frequent occurrence in this wooden built city.

Moscow was entered by the French under Bonaparte, on the 14th Sept. 1812, but arrangements were previously made for setting it on fire, by order of the Russian government, thus carrying into execution the plan of the campaign, which was to abandon and destroy. The conflagration did not become general till the night of the 16th; it raged during the 17th and 18th, and was not got under till the 19th. Nearly 3-4ths of the whole city were consumed. The Kremlin and Bielo-gorod being almost the only quarter preserved. According to a report laid before the emperor, in 1817, there were, before the destruction, 2,567 dwelling houses of stone, 6,591 of wood,—total 9,158. Booths & shops of stone 6,324, of wood 2,197—total 8,521. On the enemy's retreat there remained undamaged 526 of stone, 2,100 of wood—total 2,626; also 989 booths and shops of stone, 379 of wood—total 1,368. Built and repaired since the destruction 3,137 dwelling houses of stone, and 5,561 of wood—total 8,638. Booths and shops of 5,102, stone, 447 of wood—total 5,549. Pop. stated at the same time 312,000; males 197,482, females 114,518: by another statement in 1816, total only 166,515; 3,544 ecclesiastics. Pop. in 1781, 277,535; males 137,698; females 134,918. Births, in 1791, 49,629; deaths, 25,469. In enumerating the houses in Moscow, it is common to reckon blocks of buildings, comprising sometimes several dwellings, as single houses.

The new city has wider streets and greater uniformity in its private buildings, but in its churches and public buildings, the Asiatic taste is still preserved. The number of churches before the destruction was upwards of 700; in 1816, 288. In the church of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, which is the most splendid in the city, is an immense chandelier of massy silver, weighing nearly 3,000 lbs. The tower of Ivan in the Kremlin, the highest spire in the city, is still amply replenished with bells, and formerly contained the largest bell in the world, the weight being above 200 tons, or according to another statement 432,000 lbs. It fell during the last century, in consequence of the tower being burnt, was rent by the fall, and is now considerably sunk in the earth. Of the new buildings, one of the most remarkable is the Exercier-haus, a vast hall erected near the Kremlin, intended for the parade of troops when the weather does not admit of their exercising out of doors. It is 560 long, and 168 wide, so capacious that 1,000 infantry, or 500 cavalry may be exercised in it.

The population of Moscow is increased in winter partly by the resort of traders, but more by the arrival from the country of families of rank with a host of servants; for Moscow, not Petersburg, is the great resort of the Russian nobility. Every thing here is in extremes, the nobility live in magnificence, the populace in wretchedness. There is a similar discrepancy in the buildings, a mixture of magnificent mansions and wretched hovels. Though this discrepancy is lessened since the re-building, yet it still exists in a greater degree than in any other capital in Europe. In regard to trade, Moscow, though at a great distance from the sea, is the grand entrepot for the interior of the empire, and receives goods partly by the rivers, but more by land carriage, from Petersburg and Riga, and from Astrachan and Odessa. As a place of education it is of little repute, yet it has a number of scientific establishments, public libraries, &c. The university, planned for 600 students, had in 1818, between 200 and 300 only. Moscow was founded in the middle of the 12th century, previous to which Kiev or Kiow was the residence of the Russian sovereigns. Though the building of Petersburg, the present capital, dates from the early part of the 18th century, yet Moscow continued the frequent residence of the court till 1760.

Mosul, or Mossoul, city, A. Turkey, capital of a pachalic included in the pachalic of Bagdad, in a plain, on W. bank of the Tigris; 240 E. Aleppo, 480 WNW. Ispahan. Lon. 42. 8. E. Lat. 36. 20. N. Pop. according to Olivier, about 70,000: 25,000 Arabians, 16,000 Turks, 15,000 Kurds, 8,000 Armenians, and Nestorians. According to others 35,000. It is surrounded with walls and ditches, and defended by a castle. Almost all the houses are built of stone; the Tigris is deep and rapid, and is crossed by a bridge of boats. The air is healthy in spring, hot in summer, feverish in autumn, and inconveniently cold in winter. The inhabitants consist of Arabians, Turks, Persians, & Curds, all which languages are spoken. The Nestorian patriarch of Syria resides at Elkasch, near the town, where also are found many Christians, Armenians, Greeks, and Maronties.—This city is very large, and contains many handsome buildings, exclusive of mosques, minarets, and hummums, which are of hewn stone. The bazar is large, and well supplied; the commerce is considerable, and there are manufactures of leather and cotton, particularly muslins, said to be named from this place. The town is surrounded by a strong and high wall of stone; but all the space enclosed is not occupied with houses; and many places are covered with ruins, which shew that it was once more populous than it now is; however, the inhabitants carry on considerable manufactures of cotton. Merchandize from India is brought hither by the way of Basora, and European goods by the way of Aleppo. About a mile from Mosul, on the opposite bank of the river, are mounds, similar to those of Babylon, supposed to be the remains of ancient Ninereh.

It is one of the greatest seats of inland commerce in Africa, and the rendezvous of most of the intercourse that takes place between its northern and eastern regions. This trade is carried on by caravans, the frequent arrival of which from February to October, renders Mourzouk then a scene of perpetual bustle. It keeps up a communication with Tripoli and Egypt on one hand, and with Bornou, Cashna, &c. on the other. It is situated on the banks of a small river, and well supplied with water by a multitude of wells and springs. It is surrounded by a high wall, which not only furnishes the means of defence, but affords to the government an opportunity of collecting, at its three gates, a tax on all goods, (though provisions are exempted) that are brought for the supply of its people. Being formerly built with stone, it still retains the appellation of a Christian town, and the medley which it presents to the eye, of the vast ruins of ancient buildings, and of the humble cottages of earth and sand, that form the dwellings of its present Arab inhabitants, is singularly grotesque and strange.

Mowee, one of the Sandwich islands, about 140 m. in circ. ; 24 NNW. Owhyhee. Lon. 156. 2. W. Lat. 20. 48. N. Pop. estimated at upwards of 65,000. The soil of this island is formed only of decomposed lava, and other volcanic matter ; the inhabitants drink only brackish water, drawn from shallow wells, and in such small quantities, that one of them cannot furnish half a barrel of water a day. M. Perouse met with 4 little villages of 10 or 12 houses ; they are built and covered with straw in the same manner as those of the poorest French peasants. The articles of furniture of these islanders consist of mats, which, like European carpets, form a very neat covering, upon which they lie down ; they have besides other kitchen utensils.

Mozambique, or Mosambico, km. Africa, on E. coast, and in that part of the Indian sea, which passes between the continent and the island of Madagascar. It takes its name from the capital, situated on an island, chief of 3 islands which form a part of the kingdom.

The city of Mosambico is said to have once been very handsome, the houses well built, especially the churches and convents, and the fort or castle is about a musket shot from the town, but it is now much reduced. Mr. Salt stated the population in 1809 at 500 Portuguese, 300 of Arabian extraction, and 1,500 negroes. The trade consists in gold, ivory, and slaves. The fort is likewise one of the strongest and best contrived the Portuguese have on this coast.—The kings of Portugal spared no cost to fortify and garrison Mozambico, and to provide it with a noble hospital for the sick, and a well-stored magazine, with all necessaries for shipping, though the charge of keeping them up often exceeds the revenues it affords. Lon. 41. 38. N. Lat. 15. 5. S.

The island of Mosambico, though the largest of the 3 islands, is nevertheless very small, not being above two bow-shots in breadth, and about 6 in length, about 2 miles from the continent. The bay is about 3 miles in circuit, so that the points of land on each side advance into the sea. The other two, of St. George and St. James, lie on each side of it, facing the continent, in a direct line with it. Over against that of St. George, and about a mile from it is the cape called by the Portuguese Cabo Cetra, which is a peninsula, joined to the continent by a small neck of land, covered with the sea at high, but fordable at low water.

Mull, (an. Dreolin), one of the Hebrides, or Western islands of Scotland, separated from the county of Argyle, by a narrow passage, called the Sound of Mull. The shape is very irregular. From N. to S. it is about 22 miles; from E. to W. at the southern extremity, it is as much; but towards the N. not more than 8; nor is any part of the island 8 miles from the sea. The bays form some good harbours. On the island there are no villages except Tobermorey near the northern point, where a fishing station has lately been erected. The soil is unfavourable for corn, being for the most part rocky and barren. The mountains, however, abound with springs, and are covered with cattle, of which a great number are annually exported. Munich, in German München, city, Bavaria, capital of the kingdom & of the circle of the Iser; on the Iser; 29 SE. Augsburg, 116 ESE. Stutgard, 220 W. Vienna. Lon. 11. 35. E. Lat. 48. 8. N. Pop. in 1815, 60,024; in the city 35,765; in the 6 suburbs 18,659; belonging to the military 5,600. Abp. see. It is situated in a plain, surrounded with a rampart, but is not a place of great strength; on the outside of the rampart are the suburbs. The streets are generally broad and straight, but not well paved; the houses high, and of good appearance; the public edifices numerous; and the city is accounted one of the handsomest in Germany; few of the old towns on the continent make a better appearance.

The royal palace is a large edifice, plain in its exterior, but in its interior magnificent. The most remarkable apartment is the kaïser-saal, or emperor's hall, one of the grandest in Germany. There are several other palaces; 22 churches, some of them magnificent; council house, arsenal, barracks, mint, &c. There are many charitable institutions, which are well supported. The literary and scientific establishments are numerous, among which the central library said to contain 400,000 volumes, and 9,000 MSS.; the royal cabinet of medals, containing 10,000 Greek and Roman coins; the museum of antiquities, said to be the most complete in Germany; the academy of sciences erected in 1759, having an extensive collection of specimens of natural history, models, and instruments; the military academy, lyceum, gymnasium, the veterinary and surgical schools, observatory, cabinet of medals, gallery of pictures, and botanic garden. The environs of the city are pleasant, being enlivened by gardens and various places of public resort. The Iser is not navigable; and Munich is not distinguished for trade or manufactures.

This government is made up chiefly of the late bishopric of the same name. The country is mostly level; the soil not rich in corn, but hemp and flax are much cultivated.

Munster, city, Pru. Westphalia, now capital of a government, formerly of a bishopric of the same name; 65 NNE. Cologne. Lon. 7. 36. E. Lat. 51. 58. N. Pop. 12,797. It is situated in a very fruitful and pleasant spot, on the rivulet Aa, 6 miles from the Embs. This town was at first called Mimigernford, Mimigard, &c., but in the 11th century, obtained the name of Munster, from the collegiate church founded here by Charlemagne. Here are 11 chh., a gymnasium, a theological school, and a school for surgery. The university of Munster, which was lately attended by nearly 300 students, was suppressed in 1818, by the Prussian government. This city is remarkable for a famous treaty of a general peace, which was settled in the year 1648. It is sometimes called the treaty of Munster, and sometimes the treaty of Westphalia.

Murcia, pr. Spain, or as it is called, a kingdom, bounded N. by New Castile, E. by Valencia, S. by the Mediterranean, and W. by Grenada and Jaen; the greatest length is about 115 miles from N. to S., and 100 from E. to W. Sq. m. 8,300. Pop. in 1797, 383,226. Chief towns, Murcia, Carthagen, Lorca, Chinchilla, Albacete, Villena, and Almanza. The rivers are the Segura, Guadalentin, and Benarnor. The general aspect of the country is mountainous, the climate very fine, and the soil fertile, but badly cultivated. The soil is particularly adapted to the mulberry tree, which abounds here; among the productions are fine fruit, such as oranges, lemons, &c. sugar, honey, silk, and grain, such as rice, peas, &c. Every kind of fruit produced in Spain, is found here; it furnishes Castile, England, and France, with oranges, lemons, figs, &c. The mountains are covered with shrubs, reeds, and odoriferous and medicinal plants.

Murcia, city, Spain, capital of the province of Murcia; 96 SSW. Valencia, 115 ENE. Grenada, Lon. 1. 5. W. Lat. 37. 59. N. Pop. 34,800. Bp. see. It is situated on the Segura, in a large and beautiful valley, containing quantities of mulberry trees, but bounded at a distance of 4 miles by lofty and naked mountains. It was formerly surrounded with walls, but is now open. It is ill built; the streets irregular, crooked, ill paved, not lighted, and so narrow that there are scarcely 3 or 4, in which 2 carriages can pass. The only good square is one where bull fights are exhibited. It contains 11 parish chh., 9 convents, 3 colleges, 3 hospitals, 2 public libraries, and a botanic garden.

Murfreesborough, p-t. Rutherford co. Tennessee ; 32 SE. Nashville, 160 W. Knoxville, W. 708. Lon. 86. 37. W. Lat. 35. 53. N. Pop. in 1818, about 1,100. It is the seat of the state government, and is pleasantly situated on an eminence, which descends in every direction, and contains a court house, a jail, a market house, a branch of the Nashville bank, an academy, a printing office, and a Presbyterian meeting house. The public buildings are handsomely built of brick, and the dwelling houses are mostly brick, or framed, 2 stories high.

Murfreesborough was established only about in 1811, and was made the seat of the state government, in 1817. It is one of the most considerable and flourishing towns in the state, has a very healthy situation, is watered by excellent springs, and there are within 2 1-2 miles, 2 mineral springs, whose waters are useful in several complaints. In the vicinity of the town, on the branches of Stone's river, there are valuable mills. The district of country, in which this town is situated, is one of the richest in the state, abounding in corn, wheat, cotton, tobacco, timothy, and various other kinds of grass. The land is very fertile, and level ; there is no hill of any considerable elevation within 10 miles. New-Orleans is the market for the merchandize of this place. The road is excellent to Nashville, where commences a steam boat navigation.

Nahant, a peninsula, Mass., in the township of Lynn ; 5 SE. Lynn hotel, 9 S. Salem, 14 NE. Boston. It is connected with the main land by a narrow isthmus, consisting of a delightful Beach, more than a mile and a half in length. It is divided into Great Nahant, Little Nahant, and Bass Neck. On Great Nahant, the eastern and largest division, consisting of 305 acres of fertile land under high cultivation, there are 7 dwelling houses. In the hottest weather of summer the sea breezes, on this peninsula, are cool and refreshing ; and it has long been a place of resort, in the warm season, for gay and fashionable people from Boston, Salem, and other neighbouring towns, as well as for invalids from the vicinity and interior country.

The shores are bold, rocky, and iron bound ; after a storm with easterly wind, the foaming and dashing of the waves of the agitated ocean against the high and precipitous rocks, exhibit a most sublime spectacle. On the southern side of Great Nahant there is a curious grotto or cavern, called the Swallows House ; the entrance of which is about 10 feet wide, 5 high, and 70 long, increasing after a few steps to 14 feet in breadth, and 18 or 20 in height. Great numbers of swallows inhabit this cave and hatch their young here ; and it is a common opinion that they repose here through the winter in a torpid state.—At the east end, at low tide, in the pools among the large rocks, is found the animal flower, or rose fish, adhering to small stones in water 4 or 5 feet deep.—On the north shore is a chasm, 30 feet in depth, called the Spouting Horn, into which, at about half tide, the water rushes with great violence and a tremendous sound.

Nangasacki, or Nagaseki, s-p. Japan, on SW. coast of Ximo, situated at the end of a deep commodious bay. Lon. 129. 45. E. Lat. 32. 44. N. It is a large commercial town, remarkable for being the only place where Europeans are permitted to trade, a privilege now confined to the Dutch. The Dutch town is built on the island of Desima, only 600 feet long, and 120 broad, adjoining the town of Nangasacki, of which it is considered as a street, and it contains several large store-houses. The harbour is 3 miles long, and 1 broad. The Japanese town is divided into the inner & outward town; the former of which contains 26, and the latter 61 streets; in none of which strangers are suffered to dwell; they have particular suburbs allotted to them, where they are narrowly watched by the emperor's officers. The chief public buildings in and about it, are 5 janaguras, or large houses, built of timber, not far from the shore; where are kept three imperial jonks, or men of war, ready to be launched at command; the powder magazine, the palaces of the two residing governors, and other princes and grandees of the first and second rank, some of whom constantly reside there, and others only on particular occasions; about 62 temples within and without the city; most of them built on eminences, and serving not only for devotion, but also for recreation; the goknia, or common prison, standing near the middle of the town, and consisting of about 100 small and large huts, or cages, separated from each other. The houses are low and mean, though well filled with inhabitants, who are mostly merchants, tradesmen, shopkeepers, and handicraft-men.

Nan-king, or Nankin, or Kiang-ning, city, China, capital of Kiang-nan; 500 SSE. Peking. Lon. 118. 47. E. Lat. 32. 5. N. The amount of the population is uncertain. It has been computed at 1, 2, and even 3,000,000. It is said to have been formerly one of the most beautiful and flourishing cities in the world, but is now rapidly decaying. When the Chinese speak of its extent, they say, if two horsemen should go out in the morning by the same gate, and ride round on full speed, taking different directions, they would not meet before night. This account is evidently exaggerated; but it is certain, that Nan-king surpasses in extent all the other cities of China. We are assured, that its walls are 16 miles in circumference. This city is situated at the distance of 3 miles from the river Yangtse-kiang; it is of an irregular figure; the mountains which are within its circumference, having prevented its being built on a regular plan. It was formerly the imperial city; for this reason, it was called Nan-king, which signifies The Southern Court; but since the 6 grand tribunals have been transferred from hence to Pe-king, it is called Kiang-ning, in all the public acts.

Nan-king has lost much of its ancient splendour; it had formerly a magnificent palace, no vestige of which is now to be seen; an observatory, at present neglected; temples, tombs of the emperors, and other superb monuments, of which nothing remains but the remembrance. A third of the city is deserted, but the rest is well inhabited. Some quarters of it are extremely populous, and full of business. It is still the first city in China with regard to manufactures; the staple one is silk, also thin woollen stuffs that bear its name; beautiful paper and printing. It is also the most learned city in the empire and produces the greatest number of doctors, and has the best furnished booksellers' shops. The streets are not so broad as those of Pe-king; they are, however, very beautiful, well paved, and bordered with rich shops. Here are no public edifices corresponding to the reputation of so celebrated a city, except its gates, which are very beautiful, and some temples, among which is the famous porcelain tower; it is a pagoda of octagonal form, 200 feet high, and divided into 9 stories, by plain boards within and without, by cornices and small projections covered with green varnished tiles. It is mounted by 884 steps. It is said to have been 19 years in building, and its date answers to A.D. 1411.

Nantes, (an. Condivienum,) city, France, capital of Lower-Loire, heretofore capital of a district, called Nantois, in Bretagne; 2 posts

N. Bourdeaux, 47 SW. Paris. Lon. 1. 23. E. Lat. 47. 13. N. Pop. 77,162. H. 13,000. Bp. see. It is situated on the Loire, 27 miles from its mouth, and one of the greatest trading cities in the kingdom, and is celebrated for its brandy. Its situation is beautiful and convenient, and it has delightful environs, particularly on the banks of the Loire. It occupies the ascent and summit of a hill, from which it overlooks the winding course and fertile banks of the river. The houses are generally old and irregular. The form of the city is oblong, and it has 4 suburbs.

It contains a cathedral, 16 chh., 2 hospitals, schools of anatomy, surgery, and hydrography; a botanic garden, a museum, a cabinet of natural history, and a public library of 23,400 volumes. A university was founded here in 1460, but since the revolution it has been converted into a lyceum. This city carries on a very large trade to the French colonies, to America, to Spain, Portugal, and other parts; though ships of burthen can come no farther up the Loire than to Paimboeuf, a market-town, where the cargoes are put in smaller vessels not exceeding 80 or 90 tons, and carried to Nantes.

Nantua, t. France, principal place of a district, in Ain; 18 E. Bourg en Bresse, 36 W. Geneva. Lon. 5. 41. E. Lat. 46. 9. N. Pop. 2,791. This town was called Nantuacum, by the Romans, and was in their time a place of consideration, if we may judge from some medals and fragments of inscriptions which have been dug up at several times. The lake of Nantua, though not more than 4 or 5 miles in circ., is amply stocked with fish.

Nantucket, isl. Mass.; 10 E. Martha's Vineyard, about 8 leagues S. Cape Cod. Lon. 69. 56. to 70. 13. W. Lat. 41. 13. to 41. 22. N. It is of triangular form, about 15 miles long, and 11 where widest, broad; containing 29,380 acres. Some of the soil is very productive, particularly in hay, but it is mostly sandy, thin, and lean. It was formerly well wooded, but there are not now on the island any trees that may be considered of native growth. The land is chiefly held in common, and on account of this fact, and also for the reason of the inhabitants finding a more lucrative employment in whaling, the cultivation of the soil is much neglected. Three hundred cows, and 14,000 sheep are fed on the commons. Sheep shearing, which takes place in June, is celebrated by a general festival. Nantucket, together with several small islands near it, forms a county, and contains only one town, which is of the same name with the island, but was formerly called Sherburne.

Nantucket, p-t. & s-p. on the above island; 40 SE. Falmouth, 60 SE. New Bedford. 123 SSE. Boston, W. 531. Lon. 70. 8. W. Lat. 41. 16. N. Pop. in 1810, 6,807, of whom 210 were upwards of 70 years of age; in 1820, 7,266. It is situated on the western side of a basin, which lies in a bay on the NW. side of the island. The bay is formed by two projecting points; the longest extending from the E. end in a NW. direction, is called Sandy Point, on which is erected a light house of stone; the other, forming the westerly side of the bay, is called Eel Point. At the entrance of the basin there are 2 points 3-4 of a mile apart, which nearly land-lock the harbour, and render it safe from all winds. On Brant Point, at the right hand of the entrance there is a light house.

The town contains 2 banks, 2 insurance offices, a woollen manufactory, 30 spermaceti works employing a capital of $600,000, a reading room, and 5 houses of public worship, 2 for Friends, 2 for Congregationalists, and 1 for Methodists. The ground on which the town is built rises gradually from the shore. The streets, except the main street, are narrow and irregular. The number of dwelling houses is 720, almost wholly of wood. Very little attention has been paid to exterior elegance, but much to interior convenience and comfort. Education is well attended to, and the inhabitants are distinguished for intelligence as well as for enterprise.

The whaling business has been the principal employment of the inhabitants of this town for more than a century, and they are accounted the most expert and enterprising whalers in the world. They have about 45 ships, which average upwards of 300 tons each, employed in the whale fishery. The whole of the shipping belonging to this port, in 1820, amounted to 28,512 tons.—The effects of war fell with peculiar severity on the inhabitants of this town. They are entirely unprotected and defenceless, and have no military organization. In the late war, out of 44 whaling ships, 22 were captured; but by perseverance and success, they have made up the deficiency.

Government, &c. The government is monarchy. The title of the sovereign is king of the Two Sicilies; his dominions comprising the kingdom of Naples and the island of Sicily, together with the adjacent small islands.—The revenue in 1818, amounted to 17,275,569 dollars; the expenditure to 17,613,000 dollars.

Religion. The inhabitants are almost all Catholics; of other religions the Greek church is the most numerous. There are 21 archbishops; 110 bishops; 99,781 clergy.

Face of the country, &c. The surface is mountainous, interspersed with beautiful plains and extensive valleys, presenting a luxuriant vegetation and beautiful scenery. The country is traversed by the great chain of the Apennines, the highest summits of which are Gran Sasso and Velino. Vesuvius near Naples, is a remarkable volcano. The rivers are not large; the principal are the Garigliano, Volturno, Basiento, Pescara, Sangro, and Ofanto. The lakes Celano, Agnano, Averno, Licola, Fusaco, Patrea, Lesina, and Fondi.

Climate, soil, &c. A large part of the country enjoys a genial air and serene sky. Towards the south, below the mountains, the climate is hot, and in a part of the year unhealthy. The soil varies in different parts, but is generally fertile, and a considerable portion of it luxuriant.—The productions are wheat, maize, barley, rye, pulse, rice, cotton, flax, hemp, vines, olives, melons, almonds, dates, figs, lemons, pomegranates, &c. Agriculture is in a backward state. The pasturage in some parts is good, and a considerable number of cattle and sheep are raised. Manufactures are still in their infancy. The exports consist of raw produce, as oil, silk, wool, and fruit, with some corn, cotton, and wine.

Naples, (an. Parthenope & Neapolis,) city, and capital of the kingdom of Naples; 100 SE. Rome. Lon. 14. 16. E. Lat. 40. 50. N. Pop. in 1818, 330,518; males 155,000; females 175,000. Births in 1818, 13,879; deaths 11,471, of which 13 were upwards of 100 years. H. upwards of 40,000. Abp. see.

The situation of the city is one of the most delightful that can be imagined; partly on the declivity of a hill, and partly on the margin of a spacious and beautiful bay. It spreads its population along the shore, and covers the shelving coasts and adjacent eminences with its villas and gardens. The suburbs extend from Portici on the east, to the promontory of Misenum on the west. On the west side of the bay the delightful shores of Pozzuoli; on the east Vesuvius, with its luxuriant sides and smoking summit; in the centre, the city with its palaces, churches and gardens, gradually rising one above the other; the verdant islands at the mouth of the bay, and the wide expanse of sea, form altogether an almost unrivalled assemblage of picturesque and beautiful scenery.

The city is about 9 miles in circuit, and including all the suburbs, upwards of 18. It is surrounded by a wall, defended by a number of towers and three large castles; yet its fortifications are not adapted to resist an army. The streets, though in general narrow, are straight; and tolerably regular, handsomely paved with flags of lava; of late lighted; kept tolerably clean; the filth being carried away by subterranean sewers. But some of them from their narrowness and height of the buildings, are dark and gloomy. The Strada di Toledo, extending half the length of the city, in a right line, due N. and S., broad, well paved, bordered throughout with elegant buildings, having the Piazza di Mercato at one end, and the royal palace at the other, is one of the finest streets in Europe. The buildings of the city are more remarkable for their size, than for taste or elegance. The houses are generally of 6 or 7 stories, flat roofed, covered with a kind of stucco, and most of them have balconies in front.

The splendour of the churches and other public edifices, consists more in the richness of their paintings, marbles, and other decorations, than in the elegance of their architecture. The royal palace is of 3 stories, has an air of grandeur, and is splendid in the interior. The cathedral church is a handsome Gothic edifice, supported by 100 columns of granite. In the subterranean chapel is deposited the body of St. Januarius, whose supposed blood is preserved in a crystal vase. There are 7 theatres; that of San Carlos is one of the finest in Europe. The city is said to contain 67 chh., 130 chapels, 149 convents, 7 hospitals, and other charitable institutions.

The university was founded in 1224. The pile of building is on a large scale, and contains a library of 90,000 vols., a cabinet of MSS. from Herculaneum, collections of paintings, sculpture, bronzes, and vases. The university has 16 departments of literature and science, each having its professor. Naples contains a royal military school, a naval college, a college for the instruction of the Chinese and Japanese, schools for music and the arts, and for the deaf and dumb; an academy of arts and sciences, 4 public libraries, and societies of agriculture, manufactures, and the arts.

The trade of Naples, though great for so inactive a country as the south of Italy, is small compared with some of the ports of England and Holland. The exports consist of silk, wool, cotton, oil, wine, corn, and fruit. It has extensive manufactures of silk fabrics; also manufactures of fire arms, porcelain, and glass; also stockings, gloves, lawn, lace, cotton stuffs, diaper, &c.

The character of the inhabitants is not very favourable. The higher ranks are frequently ignorant, frivolous, and dissipated; the lower orders indolent and superstitious. The Lazeroni, a part of the populace, without dwellings or regular occupations, spending their lives in the streets, and sleeping at night under a public portico or on the steps of a church, formerly amounted to 30 or 40,000. Their number is now diminished. Naples swarms with nobility without fortunes, priests without benefices, and beggars of all descriptions.

Naplous, or Napolose, (an. Schechem, Sichechem, Sychar, and Neapolis,) city, Palestine, capital of a country, part of ancient Samaria; 24 N. Jerusalem, 90 SSW. Damascus. Lon. 35. 22. E. Lat. 32. 16. N. It is situated in a beautiful and fertile valley, between Mounts Ebal and Gerizim, and when viewed from the heights makes a very picturesque appearance, and seems luxuriantly embosomed in the most delightful and fragrant bowers, half concealed by rich gardens, and groves of stately trees. The principal employment of the inhabitants is making soap. Its manufactures supply a widely extended neighbourhood. The town has a flourishing trade, and is visited by caravans from Egypt.

The inhabitants are mostly zealous Mahometans; but there were, in 1819, according to Mr. Connor, 100 Greek Christians, 50 Samaritans, and 15 Jews.—Here are shewn the tombs of Joseph, Eleazer, and Joshua; and 3 miles distant, on the road to Jerusalem, is Jacob's Well, memorable for our Saviour's conversation with the woman of Samaria.

Argo, 28 S. Corinth, 60 S. Livadia. Lon. 22. 48. E. Lat. 37. 39. N. Pop. 6,000. Greek Abp. see. From the excellence of its harbour and situation, it obtained the epithet of Navale. The harbour is good and spacious, but the entrance narrow, and defended by a strong castle. It is the best built town in the Morea, and carries on a trade in corn, wine, oil, and cotton; but its situation is unhealthy.

It contains a cathedral, 18 chh., and 2 hospitals. It is situated on a canal, which communicates with the Aude. This was a flourishing town when the Romans first entered Gaul; they made it a Roman colony, and called it Narbo Martius. Under Augustus, it was the capital of a territory, called Gallia Narbonensis. It was formerly the capital of a vicomte, whose lords were powerful, and it was strongly fortified; but at present a wall, flanked with bastions is its only defence. It is not populous in proportion to its extent; neither is it a rich or commercial town.

Natchez, city, & port of entry, Adams co. Mississippi, on E. bank of the Mississippi, 322 above New Orleans, by the course of the river, 427 above the mouth of the stream, 669 below the mouth of the Ohio, 846 below St. Louis, 1613 below Pittsburg; 156 by land NW. New Orleans, 90 W. Monticello, 430 SW. by S. Nashville, W. 1,268. Lon. 91. 25. W. Lat. 31. 34. N. Pop. in 1810, 1,511; in 1820, 2,184; slaves 856. It is much the largest town in Mississippi, and has till lately been the seat of government. It consists of 2 parts, the upper and lower towns; the former is situated on the margin of the river; the latter, which is the principal part, on ground elevated about 100 feet above high water mark in the river. The city is regularly laid out in the form of a parallelogram, the streets intersecting each other at right angles, but the site on which it is built is very uneven. It contains a court house, a jail, a market house, a bank, an academy, 2 printing offices, and 2 houses of public worship, 1 for Roman Catholics, and 1 for Presbyterians.

Some of the houses are elegant, but they are mostly of wood, and of only 1 story. To enable the inhabitants to enjoy the evening air, almost every house has a piazza and balcony. The gardens are ornamented with fig trees, plums, peaches, and grape vines. It is a wealthy trading town, well situated for a commercial depot, having a fertile, and well cultivated country in its rear, which produces great quantities of cotton.

Natolia, or Anatolia, or Anadoli, pr. Asiatic Turkey, bounded N. by the Black sea, E. by Armenia and Syria, S. by the Mediterranean, and W. by the Archipelago and the sea of Marmora; about 650 miles long from E. to W., and 400 broad from N. to S. Sq. m. 270,000. Pop. 6,000,000. Within these limits are included not only Natolia proper, but also Caramania, Roum, and Aladulia. The whole is divided by the Turks into 6 pachalics, viz. Natolia, Sivas, Trebisonde, Konieh, or Cogni, Marasch, and Adana. The capital of Natolia proper is Kiuttajah; the principal seaport Smyrna; other principal towns are Bursa, Angora, Sinob, Guzel-Hisar, Aphiom-Karahisar, and Ismid. It is divided into 17 sangiacates. Natolia was anciently called Asia Minor, which comprised ancient Bithynia, Paphlagonia, Galatia, Phrygia, Mysia, Eolia, Ionia, Lydia, Caria, Doris, Pythia, Lycia, & Pamphylia. The soil is in general fertile, producing corn, tobacco, and fruits of various kinds; cotton and silk; and notwithstanding the indolence of the Turks, the commerce is considerable, particularly in carpets, leather, drugs, cotton, silk, and other articles of manufacture and produce. The greater part of the inhabitants are Mahometans; but there are many Christians, principally of the Greek church, governed by patriarchs, archbishops, & bishops, who are tolerated by the Porte. There are, likewise, many Armenians, and some Roman Catholics.

Natural Bridge, in Rockbridge co. Va. This bridge, which is over Cedar Creek, is one of the greatest natural curiosities in the world. Its vast dimensions, its lofty, grand, and even awful, air, excite in the beholder the most sublime emotions. It stands on the ascent of a hill, which, according to the opinion of some, has been cloven by some great convulsion, but according to that of others, worn away by the gradual and slow operation of water flowing through the chasm. The fissure at the bridge is 250 feet deep, 45 wide at the bottom, and 90 at the top. The rock which forms the bridge is 60 feet broad in the middle, and is covered with earth, which gives growth to many trees. Here is a post office; 14 SW. Lexington, 160 W. Richmond, W. 224.

It is a place of considerable trade, and has an excellent harbour, the largest in the Morea, and said to be capable of containing 2,000 sail. Some of the houses are tolerably well built, but the streets are narrow and dirty. It is fortified, and defended by a citadel, and 4 bastions. Old Navarin lies on N. side of the bay nearly opposite, has about 60 houses, and is supposed to occupy the site of ancient Pylus.

Navarre, pr. Spain, and anciently a kingdom; bounded NE. by France, E. by Aragon, S. by Old Castile, and W. by Guipuscoa and Alava. The form is that of a lozenge. Its extent from NE. to SW. about 54 miles, and from NW. to SE. about 45. The climate is as pure and healthy, and withal as temperate and as pleasant, as can be desired, which may compensate for some defects in the soil; that, generally speaking, is none of the most fertile. In some of the valleys, however, they have very good corn, excellent wine, both white and red; the former equal to any in France, the latter very little inferior to Burgundy. This province is divided into 5 merindades or jurisdictions. Pamplona is the capital. Pop. 226,227. Sq. m. 2,577.

Navarre, or Lower Navarre. This country was originally one of the 6 merindades or bailiwicks which formerly composed the kingdom of Navarre, and by the Spaniards was called Merindada de Ultra Puertos, it being to them beyond the Pyrenees, and the road which leads over them, in their language called Puertos, i.e. Gates. St. Jean Pie de Port was the capital. It now forms the department of the Lower Pyrenees.

Naxia, or Nakscha, (an. Naxos, Strongyle, Dia, Dionysias, Callipolis, and Little Sicily,) isl. in the Grecian Archipelago, about 48 miles in circ. Lon. 25. 32. E. Lat. 37. 6. N. Pop. 10,000, mostly Greeks. Sq. m. 180. It is the most fertile island in all the Archipelago, and its wine still maintains its former excellence. Besides this, its plains are covered with orange, olive, lemon, cedar, citron, pomegranate, apple, mulberry, and fig trees. It was also famed for a kind of marble, which the Greeks called Ophites, being green, speckled with white, like a snake. Some mountains on the western coast afford emery of so much virtue, that the adjoining cape is, by the Italians, called Capo Seme-riglio, or Cape Emery. It contains between 40 and 50 villages, and but one town, which stands on the S. side of the island, and is defended by a castle. About a musket-shot from it, on a rock near the sea, stands a beautiful marble portal, amidst a heap of fragments of marble & granite, supposed to have been a temple of Bacchus. 5 E. isl. Paros.

Nazareth, now Nazra, or Nasra, t. Palestine, in the pachalic of Acre; 50 N. Jerusalem. Lat. 32. 42. N. Pop. stated by a traveller, in 1816, at 1,200, or 1,400; by Mr. Connor, in 1820, at 3,000; 500 Turks; the rest mostly Christians. It has an old castle, a Greek church, a Catholic convent, with 12 or 14 friars. It consists of a collection of houses scattered irregularly near the foot of a hill. It is memorable for having been the residence of our Saviour and his family during the first 30 years of his life. It was once the see of an archbishop, removed to Monte Verde, in Italy. Nazareth held the third rank among the metropolitan cities dependent on the patriarch of Jerusalem. The Hebrews continued to inhabit it in the time of the Romans, till the reign of Constantine; and after that epoch it passed alternately from the Christians to the Saracens. Here are many places reputed holy, to which pilgrims are conducted. The church attached to the convent, is handsome, and is erected over a cave, which is asserted to have been the residence of the Virgin Mary. When the plague rages here, the sick come eagerly to rub themselves against the church hangings and pillar, believing thus to obtain a certain cure. The monks show also the workshop of Joseph, and the precipice where Christ is said to have saved himself from the fury of the multitude; also as the most venerated object, the table of Christ, being the stone, on which it is pretended that he ate before and after his resurrection. In a valley near it, is a spring, denominated by the early pilgrims, the fountain of the Virgin Mary.

Nedsjed, pr. Arabia. This province is of vast extent, comprehending all the interior parts of Arabia; bounded N. by the desert of Syria, E. by Lachsa, S. by Hadramaut and Yemen, and W. by Hedsjas. The soil is various; among the hills fertile, and bearing abundance of fruits, especially dates; but being bounded by arid tracts of country, its rivers are only short streams, which, after passing through the valleys, have their waters absorbed in the sandy plains, before they can reach the ocean. Upon this account, the inhabitants are in many places obliged to dig deep wells; and cultivation is therefore difficult, or almost impossible. The Bedouins inhabit a great part of this province. The remainder is mountainous, full of cities & villages, and parcelled out among so many petty sovereigns, that almost every town has its own schiech. The inhabitants of this vast country resemble the other Arabs in their moral qualities; they are at once robbers and hospitable.

Nedsjera, t. Arabia, in Yemen; 14 NW. Sana.

Nedsjeran, principality, Arabia, in Yemen, 3 days' journey NE. of Saade. This narrow territory is fertile in corn and fruits, especially in dates. This is, in the language of the natives, The City of Serpents; so called not only because the country behind is very full of serpents, but likewise on account of a kind of religious respect that is paid them by the natives. The streets are broad, and the houses convenient, but ancient; the churches are handsome, and in the environs are a great number of pagodas, some of which are ornamented with taste, and rich; others mean and dirty. It was formerly a place of great trade, being resorted to by merchants from different parts of the world; but since it was ceded to the British (in 1783,) the trade has chiefly been transferred to other places.

Negros, or Island of Negroes, one of the Philippine islands, in the E. Indian sea; about 240 miles in circ. It is fruitful in rice, in which the inhabitants pay tribute; and it supplies Sebu, and other adjacent parts. The mountains are inhabited by blacks, with curled hair; who, by reason of their numbers, gave their name to the island, and who live in a kind of brutal liberty, like their forefathers.

In the island there are about 3,000 that pay tribute, governed by a corregidore, and a military commander. Here grows a great deal of cacao, originally brought to the Philippines from New Spain, as also much rice, which the mountains produce without watering. Lon. 122. 30. E. Lat. 10. 10. N.

Negroland, or Nigritia, name given to a vast extent of country, in the interior parts of Africa, and comprehending many great and populous kingdoms, extending from the 7th deg. of W. Lon. to the 27th E., and from the 10th to the 25th N. Lat.; being bounded N. by Sahara and the mountains which separate it from the states of Barbary, E. by Nubia and Abyssinia, S. by Guinea and countries unknown, and W. by Guinea. The country to which the geographers of Europe have given the name Nigritia is called by the Arabs Soudân, and by the natives Aafnou; two words of similar import, that, like the European appellation, express the Land of the Blacks. Of this vast country, little is known more than the names of some of the towns and kingdoms of which it is composed.—Some parts, particularly on the river Niger, are represented as exceedingly fertile; others as sandy and desert. That it is exceedingly populous, is evident, from the great supply of slaves it affords to the European traders.

Negropont, isl. in the Grecian Archipelago; 96 miles long, and from 8 to 16 broad. This island was anciently called Eubœa; afterwards, from its capital, Egripos, or Egribos, whence the word Negropont seems to be derived. In the most ancient times, it was called Chaleodotis, or Calus Macra, or Macris. It is divided from the continent by a strait, formerly called Euripus, but now so narrow at the capital, that a galley can hardly pass through; and it is joined to the continent by a bridge, being thought to have been once so by an isthmus. The Euripus was anciently much celebrated for the stated irregularities of its motions.

Such is the fertility of the level parts of this island, that it abounds in a very extraordinary manner in grain, wine, oil, and all kinds of excellent fruits. It has also several mountains, which, for a considerable part of the year, are covered with snow; of these, the highest is Oche. Among the capes, the most remarkable are Capo d'Oro, called Capo Chîmi, Capo Figara, the ancient name of which was Caphareus, & Capo Lil r, formerly Cenæum. In the first ages when navigation was in its infancy, sailing round the first of these capes was reckoned dangerous, from the many rocks and whirlpools along the coast. This island had formerly many considerable cities; but the only places now worth notice are Negropont and Castel Rosso. Lon. 23. 10. to 24. 44. E. Lat. 38. to 39. 10. N. Pop.

about 60,000, of whom more than 3-4 are Greeks.

Negropont, or Egribos, or Egripos, or Erripo, s-p. on W. coast of the island of the same name, in the Grecian Archipelago. Lon. 23. 54. E. Lat. 38. 30. N. Pop. 16,000. Greek bp. see. The strait here is only 200 feet wide, and the town is connected with the continent by a bridge. It is situated on the ruins of Chalcis, the ancient capital of the island. The Capudan Pacha, to whose government the island belongs, has a palace here, in which he commonly resides; and the harbour is seldom without a fleet of gallees.

Towns. The Hague and Brussels are the two residences of the king and his court. Amsterdam, Antwerp, and Rotterdam, are most considerable commercial towns.

Government. The government is a limited hereditary monarchy. The constitution was formed in 1814, and bears a close resemblance to that of Great Britain. The parliament is composed of 2 houses. The lower house consists of 110 members elected for three years by the people; the upper house consists of not less than 40 nor more than 60 members, 40 years old or upwards, named for life by the king.

Religion. The established religion of the Dutch provinces is the Calvinist, and of the Belgic provinces the Roman Catholic, but all sects are tolerated. In the Dutch provinces the dissenters are numerous, and all the clergy, whether Calvinist or dissenting, receive their salaries from the public treasury.

Education, &c. There are 6 universities, viz. Leyden, Utrecht, Groningen, Louvain, Ghent, and Liege; and 7 seminaries called athenæa, lower in rank than the universities; at Harderwyck, Brussels, Amsterdam, Middleburg, Franeker, Deventer, and Breda. The means of common education are diffused throughout the country. The Dutch language is a kindred dialect to the German.

Finances, &c. The annual expenditure is nearly 7,000,000*l.*; the revenue about the same; the national debt 140,000,000*l.* stock generally at 2 or 2 1-2 per cent. The military force 50,000 regulars; the marine 12 sail of the line and 24 frigates.

Foreign Possessions. The foreign possessions are 1st, in Asia, Java, Amboyna, Banda, Ternate, Malacca, Macassar, and factories in Comorand and Persia; 2d in Africa, 13 small forts on the coast of Guinea; 3d in S. America, and the West Indies, Surinam and the islands of Curaçoa, St. Eustatius, and St. Martin.

Islands. The principal islands are Walcheren, South Beveland, North Beveland, Tholen, Schowen, Over-Flakkee, Goree, and Texel.

Rivers and canals. The rivers are the Rhine, Meuse, Scheldt, Sambre, Lys, Yssel, Lech, and Wahal. The principal lake is that of Haerlem. The canals are as numerous as roads in other countries; and the common mode of travelling is along a canal in a covered boat drawn by horses.

Face of the country, &c. The face of the country is uncommonly level, except in the eastern parts, where there are some elevations. Holland resembles a large marsh that has been drained. The air is damp and foggy near the sea, but more clear and pleasant in the interior.

Soil and productions. A large proportion of the soil is rich, and under excellent cultivation. The agricultural wealth of the northern provinces consists chiefly in pasture, which is very excellent, and fattens numerous cattle. Here also are made great quantities of excellent butter and cheese. Other productions of the Netherlands are corn, flax, hemp, tobacco, hops, madder, and fruit.

Trade and manufactures. The Netherlands have for several centuries both in trade and manufactures, taken the lead of the neighbouring states. Their linens, lace, woollens, leather, and silks were known several centuries ago throughout Europe. Holland was formerly the emporium of the East India trade, but has lost much of its commerce since its connexion with France.

Neufchatel, or Neuchatel, canton, Switz., bounded N. by Berne, E. by Berne and the lake of Neufchatel, S. by Vaud, and W. by France. Sq. m. 340. Pop. in 1807, 50,810; 2,000 Catholics, the rest Protestants. It is mountainous, being intersected by several branches of the Jura chain; the climate in the elevated parts cold, and the soil unproductive. Vines are cultivated in the lower and sheltered parts; some corn in the valleys. The inhabitants are industrious, and live in a state of comfort and higher civilization than those of some of the surrounding cantons. Their language is French, and they have manufactures of cotton, woollen, linen, lace, stockings, watches, &c. Prussia possessed the sovereignty of this canton from 1707 to 1807. The congress of Vienna acknowledged it as a Swiss canton, but the nominal sovereignty of Prussia was preserved.

Neufchatel, t. Switz. capital of the above canton; 25 W. Berne, 50 SSE. Bâle. Lon. 7. 0. E. Lat. 47. 5. N. Pop. 4,715. H. 547. It is situated on NW. side of the lake of Neufchatel, near the entrance of the small river Seyon, and is surrounded with vineyards and gardens. It is situated partly on an eminence and partly in a plain; consists of 4 principal streets; generally well built, the houses having an air of neatness and elegance. It contains an old castle, a large town house, a hospital, and a gymnasium.—Native, Vattel.

Newark, t. Essex co. Vt.; 56 NE. Montpelier. Pop. 154.

Newark, p-t. & cap. Essex co. N. J.; 5 N. Elizabethtown, 9 W. New York, W. 217. Pop. 6,507. It is finely situated on W. side of the Passaic, 6 or 7 miles above its mouth by the course of the river, and only 2 or 3 in a direct line. It is handsomely built, many of the houses are elegant, and it is one of the most beautiful towns in the United States. It contains a court house, a jail, 2 banks, an academy, and 5 houses of public worship, 2 for Presbyterians, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Baptists, and 1 for Methodists. It has extensive manufactures of shoes, leather, coaches, fancy chairs, and cabinet work. Two weekly newspapers are published here.—The Passaic is navigable to this town, for sloops of 80 tons. The cider, known by the name of the Newark cider, is chiefly made in the township of Orange which borders on W. side of Newark.

Newark Bay, bay on the coast of America, at the mouths of the Passaic and Hackinsack, between the main land, and a peninsula of New Jersey, which extends from Paulus Hook to near Staten Island. It divides into two branches; one running to the east, between the continent and north coast of Staten Island, joins the Hudson; the other runs southerly between the continent and west coast of Staten Island.

Newark, p-t. Newcastle co. Delaware; 12 WSW. Wilmington, W. 105. Here is a respectable academy.

Newark, p-t. & cap. Licking co. Ohio, on Licking river, at the junction of Racoon and South Forks; 26 WNW. Zanesville, 34 ENE. Columbus, W. 393. Pop. 410. It contains a court house, a Presbyterian meeting house, and about 70 dwelling houses.—Near this town are some of the most extensive and interesting ancient works to be found in Ohio. There are 4 forts, the largest containing 40 and the smallest 20 acres; surrounded by walls of earth from 10 to 30 feet high; and they are also connected with each other by parallel walls of earth. The plain on which they are built is elevated about 40 feet above the alluvion of the river, and is exceedingly fertile.—A few miles below Newark, on Licking river, are numerous extraordinary holes, many of them more than 20 feet deep. They are vulgarly called wells, but the object for which they were dug is unknown.

Newark, t. Eng. in Nottinghamshire; 18 SW. Lincoln, 124 N. London. Lon. 0. 50. W. Lat. 53. 5. N. Pop. 7,236. It is situated on the Trent, whose stream divides and forms it into an island, uniting again below the town. The chief trade is making malt. It is a corporation and a borough town, sending two members to parliament. The market is on Wednesday.—Lime-stones abound within one mile of the town, from an eminence called Bacon Hill. The town hall is a magnificent stone building.—On the 21st March, 1644, a battle was fought near this town, between the royalists under prince Rupert, and the parliament troops commanded by Sir John Meldrum.—Native, Bp. Warburton.

Newark, t. Upper Canada, between lakes Erie and Ontario, opposite to Niagara; 7 N. Queenstown. It is pleasant and well built, and contained in 1818, about 200 houses, a court house, and a church. It was burnt in 1814.

Lat. 35. 20. N. Pop. in 1800, 2,467; in 1820, 3,663. It contains a court house, a jail, a theatre, a masonic hall, 2 banks, an academy, a public library, and 3 houses of public worship, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Baptists, and 1 for Methodists. It is very pleasantly situated, handsomely built, mostly of brick, and is the largest and most improved town in N. C., and accounted more healthy than any other near the sea board. It is a flourishing town, and has considerable commerce; the exports consist chiefly of grain, pork, lumber, and naval stores. The shipping owned here, in 1816, amounted to 4,975 tons. An elegant steam boat, connected with the stages from Charleston, S. C., and with the stages and steam boats to the northward, plies between Newbern and Elizabeth City. By this line the rout from Norfolk to Charleston, (800 miles,) is performed in 7 days.

The village is pleasantly situated, well built, and flourishing, and commands a delightful view of the Hudson and the Highlands. It contains a bank, an academy with about 100 students, and 4 houses of public worship, 1 for Presbyterians, 1 for Associate Reformed Presbyterians, 1 for Episcopalians, and 1 for Methodists, about 450 houses, and 2,377 inhabitants. The academy building is a large edifice, and contains a valuable library of 600 or 700 volumes, and an excellent collection of maps, mathematical apparatus, &c. The principal streets are paved, and the village is well supplied with excellent water. The courts for the county are held alternately at Newburgh and Goshen. The trade of Newburgh is sufficient for the constant employment of 10 freighting vessels, from 90 to 120 tons each, besides a number of smaller vessels. There are upwards of 40 dry good stores, besides stores for groceries, hardware, &c. In the western part of the town on a small stream called Chamber's Creek, there are fourteen mills of various kinds, consisting of flour mills and powder mills on an extensive scale, and also plaister mills, fulling mills, &c. It is a very valuable agricultural town.

Newburgh, t. Scot. in Fifeshire, on S. side of the Tay; 6 N. Falkland, 8 SE. Perth. Lon. 2. 3. W. Lat. 57. 20. N. Pop. 2,000. It has a spacious harbour. The Tay is navigable to this place for vessels of 500 tons. Near it was formerly a cross called Macduff's Cross, broken in pieces and carried away by the reformers in the year 1599.

Newbury, t. Eng. in Berkshire; 51 E. Bath, 56 W. London. Lon. 1. 15. W. Lat. 51. 24. N. Pop. 4,898. It is situated on the river Kennet, which is made navigable to Reading, and a little below it joins the Thames. Newbury is said to have flourished in the decay of Spene, which now appears as a suburb. It was formerly celebrated for its woollen manufactures; at present the chief manufacture consists in matting. It has a large market on Thursday.—Near this town were two obstinate battles fought at different times, between the royalists and the forces of the parliament, king Charles being present at both of them; and both were fought almost upon the same spot of ground; the first on the 20th of September 1643, and the other on the 27th of October, 1644.

Newburyport, p-t. & port of entry, Essex co. Mass., on S. side of the Merrimack, 3 miles from the sea; 24 N. Salem, 24 SSW. Portsmouth, 32 NNE. Boston, W. 475. Lon. 70. 52. W. Lat. 42. 49. N. Pop. in 1810, 7,634; in 1820, 6,852. It contains a court house, a jail, an alms house, 2 banks, 2 insurance offices, an academy, 3 printing offices, from one of which is issued a semi-weekly newspaper, and 7 houses of public worship, 3 for Congregationalists, 2 for Presbyterians, 1 for Episcopalians, and 1 for Baptists. All the meeting houses, except that of the Baptists, are furnished with bells, and are ornamented with steeples or cupolas. The limits of the town include only 647 acres. The situation is remarkably fine, and it is a very pleasant town. The academy building is a handsome brick edifice, and stands just within the limits of Newbury.

Newburyport ranks as the third town in Massachusetts. Its trade with the West Indies is considerable, and it has a number of vessels employed in the trade to Europe and the East Indies. The Bank fishery is now carried on here to considerable extent. The Labrador fishery was formerly a lucrative business at this place, but for several years it has been discontinued. The town is also well situated for ship building, having the advantage of receiving great quantities of lumber from the interior, by the waters of the Merrimack, and several public ships have been built here. The harbour is large, safe, and commodious, but difficult to enter. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1821, amounted to 20,421 tons. On the south side of the entrance of the harbour, on Plumb island, there are two lights. This island is a place of much resort in the summer season.—Newburyport suffered very severely by fire in 1811, & has not recovered its former prosperity.

Newcastle Island, small isl. in the Florida stream. Lon. 81. 40. W. Lat. 24. 48. N.

Newcastle Bay, large open bay of the Pacific ocean, on NE. coast of New Holland, in which are some small low islands and shoals S. of York Cape.

Newcastle under Line, t. Eng. in Staffordshire, on the Line, a branch of the Trent, in the centre of the district of the potteries; 55 SE. Chester, 149 NNW. London. Lon. 2. 15. W. Lat. 53. N. Pop. 6,175. The situation very pleasant, and the town is well built, the principal street is spacious and well paved. It contains 1 church, having a lofty embattled tower with a chime of 8 bells, several dissenting places of worship, and 20 almshouses. The principal business is the clothing trade and the manufacture of hats. The surrounding villages to a considerable distance are entirely occupied with extensive manufactures of porcelain, earthen ware, stone ware, &c. The district abounds in coal.—It sends 2 members to parliament. Market on Monday, with several annual fairs.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne, s-p. Eng. capital of Northumberland, on N. bank of the Tyne, 10 miles from its mouth; 14 N. Durham, 100 S. Edinburgh, 270 N. London. Lon. 1. 37. W. Lat. 54. 53. N. Pop. 27,587; and including the out parishes 35,711. The river forms a very secure and commodious harbour. Vessels of 300 or 400 tons come up to the town; larger vessels stop at Shields. The town is situated in the greatest coal district in the world, is a place of great trade and business, and a kind of northern metropolis of the kingdom. The walls are upwards of 2 miles in circuit; but including the part without the walls, the town extends about 2 miles along the river, and 1 mile broad, rising along the hill and crowning its summit. The houses are almost all of stone and brick. The streets near the river, long since formed, are narrow and crooked; but the modern streets are laid out with taste, and built with elegance.

The public buildings are numerous, and many of them large and elegant; and the town is well provided with charitable and literary institutions, which are liberally supported. Of the churches the most distinguished is that of St. Nicholas, supposed to have been raised in 1359; 240 feet long, 75 broad; the height of the tower 194. The spire is of admirable symmetry. There are 15 dissenting places of worship. The grammar school was founded in 1525; and the literary and philosophical society in 1793.

The staple trade of Newcastle consists in coal, which is found along the Tyne both above and below the town, and supplies the metropolis, the whole of the eastern, and most of the south-coasts of the island, and the opposite coasts of France, Holland, and Germany. The quantity exported in eight years, from January 1802, was 4,713,476 Newcastle chaldrons; or 12,490,700 tons; i. e. 1,561,337 tons annually. The other exports are lead, grindstones, salt, butter, tallow, and salmon. The shipping in 1820, was 834 ships; whole tonnage 184,149 tons. The number of vessels which cleared in 1819, were coasters, 8,828; foreign, 995.—There are extensive manufactories of glass, pottery, brick, vitriol, iron, tin, brass, plate metal, &c. Ship building is carried on to a great extent.—It sends 2 members to parliament. Principal market on Tuesday and Saturday.—Newcastle is a very ancient town, supposed by Camden to have been called Gabrosetum by the Romans. The wall Hadrian terminated here; that of Severus passed through the town.—Natives, Lords Colingwood, Eldon, and Stowell.

New-Forest, large tract, Eng. in Hampshire, about 50 miles in circ., which contained many populous towns and villages, and 36 mother-churches, till it was laid waste and turned into a forest by William the Conqueror. King Henry the VIII. built some castles in it, and it has now several towns and villages. It is situated in that part of Hampshire, which is bounded E. by Southampton river, and S. by the British Channel. This is the only forest which belongs to the crown, of which the origin is known.

Newfound Lake, lake, N.H., in Hebron, New Chester, Alexandria, and Bridgewater; 6 miles long from N. to S., and 2 1-4 broad.

Newfoundland, isl. in the N. Atlantic ocean, separated from the continent of N. America by the straits of Belleisle and the gulf of St. Lawrence, of a triangular form, 381 miles long, from 40 to 287 broad, and without including the bendings of the coast, about 900 miles in circumference; first discovered by Sebastian Cabot in the year 1497. The country is very unequal, and covered with hills and mountains which appear more lofty in the interior parts than near the coast. They are every where overgrown with pines, so as to be passable only in those parts where the inhabitants have cut roads. This species of pine seldom exceeds the height of 12 or 18 feet in the open parts; but in valleys, where they are sheltered from the frost and the piercing winds, they rise to a much greater height. The coasts are subject to fogs, attended by almost continual storms of snow and sleet, the sky being usually overcast. In winter the cold is excessive, nothing but snow and ice being seen, and the bays and harbours entirely frozen. The whole circuit of the island is full of bays and harbours, all so spacious, and sheltered on all sides by the mountains, except their entrance, that the vessels lie in perfect security. The inhabitants are not without some horned cattle; but these are preserved with great care and difficulty. They have also their little kitchen gardens for summer herbs; but all other species of provisions, as flour, salt meat, &c., they are supplied with from England and the continent of America.

This island is chiefly valued for the cod fishery carried on upon the Banks of Newfoundland. The Great Bank is 60 miles from SE. shore, and 380 miles long and 75 wide; E. of this is Green Bank, which is 240 long and 120 broad.—As many as 3,000 sail of small craft, and 100,000 men are employed in these fisheries, which are said to yield annually about 445,000 quintals of fish.—The population is very fluctuating, varying according to the state of the fisheries. In 1813, a time when the fisheries were flourishing, it was estimated at 70,000.—The Methodists have 11 missionaries here. The principal towns are Placentia, St. John's, and Bonavista. Towns. Concord is the seat of government. Portsmouth is much the largest town, and the only seaport.

Education. There is a college at Hanover, and academies are established at Atkinson, Chesterfield, Deerfield, Exeter, Gilmanton, Hampton, Haverhill, Lancaster, Londonderry, Newmarket, New Ipswich, Plainfield, Portsmouth, and Salisbury. Some of these academies, particularly those at Exeter and Plainfield, are liberally endowed. Public schools are supported throughout the state, and afford to all the inhabitants the means of common education.

Religion. The following is a view of the several denominations for 1821; Congregational ministers 102; Baptist ministers 77; Methodist ministers 27; Friends meetings 13; Presbyterian ministers 7; Episcopalian 6; Universalist 1; Shakers 2 societies. Houses of public worship in 1817, 261.

Government. The executive power is vested in a governor and a council of 5 members. The legislature is composed of a senate of 12 members, and a house of representatives. Every town containing 150 rateable polls, is entitled to send one representative, and one for every additional 300 polls. All the above officers are elected annually by the people, on the 2d Tuesday in March. The legislature meets annually on the 1st Wednesday in June.

Rivers and Lakes. Five of the largest rivers in New England rise either wholly or in part in this state. These are the Connecticut, Merrimack, Androscoggin, Saco, and Piscataqua.—The other most considerable rivers are the Upper and Lower Ammonoosuc, Sugar river, Ashuelot, Contoocook, Margalloway, and Nashua. The principal lakes are Winnipiseogee, Umbagog, Ossipee, Sunapee, Squam, and Newfound lakes.

Face of the country and mountains. The whole extent of sea coast from the southern boundary to the mouth of the Piscataqua harbour, is 18 miles. The shore is generally a sandy beach, and bordering upon it are salt marshes, intersected by creeks. There are several coves, convenient for fishing vessels, but the entrance of the Piscataqua is the only harbour for ships. For 20 or 30 miles from the sea the country is either level, or moderately uneven. Then commences a country the surface of which is greatly diversified by hills, valleys, and several elevated mountains, among which are the White Mountains, accounted the highest in the United States, east of the Mississippi. The other most considerable summits are Moosehillock, Monadnock, Kearsarge, Sunapee, Ossipee, &c.—Some of the most remarkable natural objects of curiosity are the cave in Chester, the rock in Durham, Bellows falls in Walpole, and particularly the Notch of the White Mountains.

Soil and productions. There is a great variety of soil in this state; a considerable proportion is fertile, and it is generally better adapted to grazing than tillage. The interval lands on the large rivers are esteemed the most valuable. These produce various kinds of grain in great abundance. But the uplands, of an uneven surface, and of a rocky, warm, moist soil, are accounted the best for grazing. The principal articles of produce are beef, pork, mutton, butter, cheese, wheat, rye, Indian corn, oats, barley, pulse, and flax. The number of neat cattle, in 1812, was calculated at 211,534; horses 32,161; sheep 364,892. Apples are abundant, and no good husbandman thinks his farm complete without an orchard. Other kinds of fruit are not extensively cultivated.

Manufactures. The manufactures of New Hampshire have of late greatly increased. There are now upwards of 30 cotton and woollen manufactories, and 9 or 10 paper mills. There is a glass manufactory company in Keene, incorporated in 1814; and there are establishments for the manufacture of iron in Franconia. There are also several furnaces for casting iron, hollow ware, &c. Among the towns where the most considerable manufacturing establishments are situated, are Exeter, Dover, Peterborough, Franconia, Pembroke, New Ipswich, Keene, &c.

Exports. The principal articles of export are lumber, fish, beef, pork, horses, neat cattle, sheep, flaxseed, pot and pearl ashes.

Climate. The climate of New Hampshire is subject to the extremes of heat and cold, but the air is generally pure and salubrious. Morning and evening fires become necessary from about the middle of September. Cattle are housed from the beginning of November; and in the course of this month the earth and rivers generally become thoroughly frozen and covered with snow. The open country is generally cleared of snow in April, but in the woods, it very often lies in the northern parts of the state till May.

New-Haven, p-t. Addison co. Vt., on the Otter Creek; 5 S. Vergennes, 7 NW. Middlebury, 44 WSW. Montpelier, W. 475. Pop. 1,566. It is a pleasant and considerable town, and contains a valuable mine of iron ore.

New-Haven, co. Ct., bounded NW. by Litchfield co., N. by Hartford co., E. by Middlesex co., S. by Long Island Sound, and W. by Fairfield co. Pop. in 1810, 37,664; in 1820, 39,616.

New-Haven, city, s-p. and semi-metropolis of Connecticut, in New Haven co.; 34 SSW. Hartford, 52 W. New London, 76 NE. New York-134 WSW. Boston, W. 304. Lon. 72. 56. W. Lat. 41. 18. N. Pop. of the township in 1790, 4,434; in 1800, 5,175; in 1810, 6,974; in 1820, 8,327; of the city in 1810, 5,772; in 1820, 7,147.

The city lies round the head of a bay which sets up about 4 miles N. from Long Island Sound, and is situated on a large and beautiful plain which is bordered on the north partly by eminences called East and West Rock, presenting bold and almost perpendicular columns of naked rock, from 350 to 370 feet high. Two small rivers bound the city, one on the east, the other on the west.

It was incorporated as a city in 1784, and is 3 miles long from east to west, and 2 broad. It is regularly laid out, and consists of two parts, old and new towns. The old town was laid out in a large square, divided into 9 smaller squares, each 52 rods on a side, separated by streets 4 rods in width. The central square is open, appropriated to public uses, and is one of the most beautiful in the United States. On and around this square, are erected the public buildings, consisting of a state house, an indifferent building of brick, the college edifices, and 4 houses of public worship, 2 for Congregationalists, very elegant brick buildings, 1 for Episcopalians, a very beautiful Gothic edifice of stone, and 1 for Methodists. Besides these the city contains a jail, an almshouse, a custom house, an academy, a library of 1,500 volumes, a museum, 2 banks, 3 insurance offices, 6 printing offices, from 4 of which weekly newspapers are issued, and 2 other periodical publications.

New Haven is one of the most agreeable towns in the United States. The streets are sandy, but are kept clean. The houses are mostly of wood, 2 stories high, not expensive or very elegant, yet having an appearance of neatness and comfort. Among the houses recently erected are several handsome edifices of brick and stone. The public square and the principal streets are finely ornamented with trees, and a great part of the houses have gardens in the rear filled with fruit trees, giving the city a rural and delightful appearance. The burying ground in the north west part of the town is an object of particular interest. It is laid out in parallelograms, subdivided into family burying places, the whole ornamented with rows of trees. The monuments are almost wholly of marble. Exquisite taste is manifested in the whole design, and the appearance is solemn and impressive.

The harbour is well defended from winds, but is shallow, and gradually filling up with mud. It has about 7 feet on the bar at low water, and the common tides rise 6, and the spring tides 7 or 8 feet. The long wharf is 3,943 feet in length, the longest in the United States. In 1765 it was only 20 rods long, yet there is less water at its termination now, than there was in 1765. The maritime commerce of New Haven is greater than that of any other town in Connecticut. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1821, amounted to 10,255 tons. Both the foreign and coasting trade are considerable, and packets ply regularly between New Haven and New York.—The Indian of New Haven was Quinipiack. It was first settled by the English in 1638, and was the capital of the colony of New Haven which continued distinct from the colony of Connecticut till 1665.—The legislature of the state meets alternately here and at Hartford.

Yale College, founded in 1700, incorporated in 1701, was originally placed at Killingworth; in 1707, removed to Saybrook, and in 1717, to New Haven. It is a distinguished and flourishing institution, and ranks with the first literary seminaries in the United States. There are 8 collegiate buildings, 4 halls, 100 feet by 40, of 4 stories, each containing 32 rooms for students; a chapel 50 feet by 40, containing also a philosophical chamber; a lyceum, containing lecture rooms, library, &c.; all of brick; a dining hall of stone, with a room for the mineralogical cabinet, lecture rooms, &c., and a chemical laboratory; and the medical college, a large edifice of stone. The college library contains about 7,000 volumes, and 3 libraries belonging to societies contain together 2,500 volumes. The philosophical and the chemical apparatus are very excellent. A cabinet of minerals was deposited here, in 1811, by George Gibbs, Esq, the original cost of which was 4,000*l.* sterling; the number of specimens 10,000. The college has another cabinet containing about 4,000 specimens.

The board of trustees consists of the president of the college, 10 clergymen, the governor of the state, lieutenant governor, and the 6 senior members of the council. The executive government is entrusted to a president, 9 professors, including 4 medical professors, 1 of mathematics and natural philosophy, 1 of chemistry, mineralogy, and geology, 1 of the Hebrew, Greek, and Latin languages, 1 of divinity, 1 of rhetoric and oratory, 1 of materia medica and botany, 1 of the theory and practice of physic, surgery, and obstetrics, 1 of chemistry and pharmacy, and 1 of anatomy and physiology; and 5 tutors. The number of undergraduates, in 1821, was 325; medical students 78; total 403. Total number educated to 1820, 3,478; number living 1,884.—The lectures in the medical department commence on the 1st of Nov.—Commencement is held on the 2d Wednesday in Sept. There are 3 vacations; the 1st from commencement, 6 weeks; the 2d from the 2d Wednesday in January, 3 weeks; the 3d from the Wednesday immediately preceding the 2d Thursday in May, 3 weeks.

Towns. Trenton is the seat of government. The other most considerable towns are Newark, New Brunswick, and Elizabethtown.

Education. Two colleges have been incorporated in this state, one at Princeton, and one at New Brunswick. The latter is not at present in operation. There are theological seminaries at Princeton and New Brunswick, and about 20 academies have been established in various places. The state has a fund of $99,414 for the support of free schools.

Religion. The following is the statement of the religious denominations for 1817: Presbyterians 74 churches and 59 ministers; Dutch Reformed 31 churches and 20 ministers; Baptists 30 churches and 23 ministers; Episcopalians 24 churches and 11 ministers; Congregationalists 9 churches and 5 ministers; Quakers 44 meeting houses; Methodists 6,739 members.

Government. The legislature is composed of a legislative council, and a house of assembly; the former consisting of 13 members, one from each county; and the latter of 35 members; all chosen annually. The executive is composed of a governor chosen annually by a joint vote of both branches of the legislature, a vice president chosen by the council, and a privy council, composed of 3 members of the legislative council. The annual elections are in October.

Rivers. Delaware river separates this state from Pennsylvania, and the Hudson forms the northern part of the eastern boundary. The other most considerable rivers are the Raritan, Passaic, Hackinsack, Great Egg Harbour River, and Musconegunk.

Face of the country, soil, &c. The three northern counties, Sussex, Morris, and Bergen, are mountainous. The next four, Hunterdon, Somerset, Essex, and Middlesex, are agreeably diversified with hills and valleys. South mountain, a great ridge of the Alleghany range, crosses the state in Lat. 41. N., and the Kittatinny ridge crosses a little to the north of South mountain. The greater part of the six southern counties is composed of the long range of level country, which commences at Sandy Hook, and lines the coast of the middle and southern states. Much of this range is nearly barren, producing only shrub oaks and yellow pines; but the rest of the state has a large proportion of good soil, excellent for grazing, and for the various purposes of agriculture. The productions are wheat, rye, maize, buck wheat, potatoes, oats, barley, and fruits. Great numbers of cattle are raised in the mountainous parts for the markets of New York and Philadelphia. Large quantities of butter and cheese are also made. New Jersey is remarkable for an excellent breed of horses.

Exports. The exports are flour, wheat, horses, cattle, hams, cider, lumber, flax seed, leather, and iron. The greater part of the produce exported from this state, passes through New York and Philadelphia.

Manufactures. Great quantities of leather are manufactured at the valuable tanneries of Trenton, Newark, and Elizabethtown. Large quantities of shoes are made at Newark. There is a glass house in Gloucester county, and there are paper mills and nail manufactories in various parts of the state. But the most important manufacture is that of iron. In the county of Morris, there are 7 rich iron mines, 2 furnaces, 2 rolling and slitting mills, and about 30 forges. The annual produce of these works, is about 540 tons of bar iron, 800 tons of pig, besides large quantities of hollow ware, sheet iron, and nail rods. There are also iron works in the counties of Burlington, Gloucester, Sussex, &c. The annual produce in the whole state, is computed at about 1,200 tons of bar iron, 1,200 tons of pig, and 80 tons of nails, exclusive of small articles.

New-Kent, co. Va., bounded N. by Pamunky river, E. by James City co., S. by Charles City and Henrico cos., and W. by Hanover co.; W. 143. Pop. in 1810, 6,478; slaves 3,725. Pop. in 1820, 6,630. Chief town, Cumberland.

New-London, co. Ct., bounded N. by Windham co., E. by Rhode Island, S. by Long Island Sound, and W. by Middlesex co. Pop. 34,707. Chief towns, New London and Norwich.

New-London, city, & port of entry, New London co. Ct., on W. bank of the Thames, 3 miles above its mouth; 13 S. Norwich, 42 SE. Hartford, 55 W. Newport, 52 E. New Haven, 58 SW. Providence, W. 358. Lon. 72.30. W. Lat. 41.24. N. Pop. in 1810, 3,238; in 1820, 3,330. It is pleasantly situated, irregularly laid out, and has about 30 streets, many of them very inconsiderable. It contains a court house, a jail, an alms house, an academy, an insurance office, 2 banks, 2 printing offices, and 4 houses of public worship, 1 for Congregationalists, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Baptists, and 1 for Methodists. The courts for the county are held alternately here and at Norwich.

This is one of the most considerable commercial towns in Connecticut. The harbour is large, safe, and commodious, by far the best in the state, and has 5 fathoms water. It is defended by Fort Trumbull on W. side of the river, and by Fort Griswold on E. side in Groton. On a point which projects considerably into the sound on the west side of the entrance, about 3 miles below the city, there is a light house. The commerce consists chiefly in the coasting trade with the southern states, and a trade with the West Indies, and packets regularly ply between this place and New York. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1821, amounted to 10,831 tons.

New-London, t. Chester co. Pa. Pop. 1,198.

New-Orleans, parish, Louisiana. Pop. exclusive of the city, 14,175.

New-Orleans, city, port of entry, and cap. Louisiana, in a parish, and on an island of the same name; 105 miles by the course of the river, above the bar at the mouth of the Mississippi, and about 90 in a direct line, W. 1,260. Lon. 90. 8. W. Lat. 29. 57. N. Pop. in 1802, 10, or 11,000; in 1810, 17,242; in 1820, 27,176. The city is on the left bank of the Mississippi, but so situated on a bend that it faces to the east. It is regularly laid out; the streets are generally 40 feet wide, and intersect each other at right angles. On the streets near the river, the houses are principally of brick, but in the back parts of the town they are mostly of wood. The buildings have no cellars, except the space between the ground and the lower floors, which are raised 5 or 6 feet from the earth. Most of the houses in the suburbs have beautiful gardens, ornamented with orange groves.

The country here is lower than the surface of the river, which is confined within its channel by an artificial embankment, called the Levee, raised at great expense, and extending from Fort Plaquemine, 43 miles below the city, to 120 miles above it. It is about 4 feet high, and 15 wide. It is directly in front of the town, and affords a very pleasant walk. The city contains a court house, a jail, a market house, an arsenal, a governor's palace, a custom house, a hospital, a French theatre, an elegant English theatre, which cost upwards of $100,000, a Catholic college, a female orphan asylum, a nunnery, 3 insurance offices, 5 banks, one of which is a branch of the United States bank, and 3 houses of public worship, 1 for Roman Catholics, 1 for Episcopalians, and 1 for Presbyterians. There are also two chapels and a hall where public worship is celebrated. Most of the public buildings are large and handsome. The Catholic cathedral church is a large and elegant edifice. The Presbyterian church, is a spacious and handsome edifice of brick and stone.

The buildings of the city were formerly almost entirely of wood, but those recently erected are, for the most part, handsomely built of brick; and the place is of late, in various respects, very rapidly improving. The population is fast increasing by accessions from all the states in the union, and from almost every kingdom in Europe. The French language, 15 years ago, was here almost universal, but at present the English predominates. There are 5 newspapers published in the city, 3 of which are printed in English, the other two both in French and English.

New Orleans is admirably situated for trade, near the mouth of one of the noblest rivers in the world, whose numerous branches extending many hundred miles in different directions, waft to this port the products of various climates; and it is already become one of the greatest emporiums of commerce in America. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1821, amounted to 38,851 tons. The number of arrivals and clearances in a year, ending Oct. 1st, 1815, was 623; 1816, 699; and 1817, 1,030. In the year ending Oct. 1st, 1817, 1,500 flat bottomed boats, and 500 barges arrived at the city, from the upper country, bringing its productions. The exports for the year ending Oct. 1st, 1817, amounted to $13,501,036,72.—The following is a view of the quantity of some of the principal articles of domestic produce, that arrived at New Orleans in the year ending Oct. 1st, 1817:

Bacon	cwt.	18,000	Molasses	gals.	500,000
Beef	bbbs.	4,000	Sugar	hhds.	20,000
Cotton	bales	65,000	Taffia	gals.	150,000
Corn	bushs.	140,090	Tobacco	hhds.	28,000

Flour bbls. 190,000 Wheat bush. 95,000
Lead cwt. 7,000 Whiskey gals. 150,000

In 1819 there were 50 steam boats navigating the rivers Mississippi and its tributaries, and their number is increasing

The British made an attack on New Orleans in December, 1814, but were repulsed by the Americans under General Jackson, with the loss of about 3,000 men, killed, wounded, and prisoners. The American army lost only 7 men killed and 6 wounded.

The island of New Orleans is formed by the river Mississippi on one side, and the lakes Pontchartrain and Maurepas, together with an outlet of the Mississippi, called the river Iberville, on the other. It is about 160 miles long, and from 3 to 50 broad. It produces sugar, lemons, oranges, and figs.—Lake Pontchartrain communicates with the city by the Bayou St. John, which is navigable for small vessels, which pass between New Orleans, Mobile, and Pensacola. Fort St. John is situated at its entrance into the lake, 7 N. New Orleans. Fort St. Charles is situated NE. of the city.

Newport, co. R. I. comprising the islands of Rhode Island, Conanicut, and Block islands, and the towns of Tiverton and Little Compton on the continent. Pop. 15,771.

Newport, p-t. s-p. & semi-metropolis, R. I. in Newport co., on SW. end of the island of Rhode Island, 5 miles from the sea, 15 S. Bristol, 30 S. Providence, 55 E. by N. New London, 71 S. by W. Boston, W. 419. Lon. 71. 14. W. Lat. 41.25. N. Pop. in 1800, 6,644; in 1810, 7,907; in 1820, 7,319. It contains a state house, a jail, an academy, 5 banks, 2 insurance offices, a public library of 1,600 volumes, 2 circulating libraries, and 11 houses of public worship, 2 for Congregationalists, 3 for Baptists, 1 for Sabbatharians or Seventh-day Baptists, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Friends, 1 for Methodists, 1 for Moravians, and a Jews' Synagogue. The library has a very elegant building appropriated to its accommodation. The town lies N. and S. upon a gradual ascent east from the water and exhibits a beautiful view from the harbour & the neighbouring hills. It is celebrated for the salubrity of its climate, as well as for the beauty of its situation, and is a place of fashionable resort from the middle and southern states during the hot months. It is more noted than any other town in the United States for the variety and excellence of the fresh fish which its market affords. No fish market in the world, is perhaps, better supplied.

Newport was first settled in 1638, by Wm. Coddington and his associates. It was formerly more populous, commercial and flourishing than at present. Before the American revolution it was the 4th commercial town in the colonies, and contained at one time more than 9,000 inhabitants. It suffered severely during the revolutionary war, and was for a long time occupied by the enemy. The principal street is more than a mile long. The houses have an antique appearance. The harbour which spreads westward before the town, is one of the finest in the world, having a safe and easy entrance, and so spacious that a large fleet may anchor in it and ride in perfect security. It is defended by 3 forts; Fort Green on N. side of the town; Fort Adams on Brenton's Point, 2 SW. of the town; and Fort Wolcott on Goat island, which lies in front of the town. On this island there is also a military hospital belonging to the U.S. The shipping owned here, in 1821, amounted to 10,701 tons.—A large stone mill is still standing here, which was erected before the date of the earliest records.

Newry, t. Oxford co. Maine; 24 NW. Paris. Pop. 304.

Newry, v. Huntingdon co. Pa. in the township of Frankstown. Pop. 169.

Newry, s-p. Ireland, on a river of the same name, which runs into Carlingford bay; 30 SSW. Belfast, 50 N. Dublin. Lon. 6. 16. W. Lat. 54. 9. N. Pop. 15,000. Vessels carrying 200 tons can come up to the town, and by means of a canal from Newry to the river Ban, an inland navigation is open for vessels of 70 tons burden.

Newry stands about two miles above the mouth of the river, and was early fortified by the English, as commanding a very strong pass, leading through the bogs and mountains, between Dundalk and the remoter parts of Ulster. The town spreads along the side of a steep hill, surrounded by mountains, except to the N. and NW. where it opens into a fine country, through which runs the new canal. Below the town lies the river, over which are two handsome stone bridges, one of 6 arches, on the road leading to Dublin, the other of 10, on that to Armagh; the high road to the north passes directly through the town, which has a good market, and two annual fairs. It subsisted and thrived formerly, chiefly by its being a place of strength, and having a garrison, by its being a great thoroughfare, and by its inland trade; and though at the mouth of a river falling into Carlingford bay, it was very little considered as a port. But of late years, and more especially since the opening of the new canal, it has made a very different figure. Its exports are butter, beef, pork, and grain. It had formerly an extensive linen manufacture, latterly much diminished. Newry sends one member to parliament.

Towns. There are 5 incorporated cities, New York, Albany, the seat of government, Troy, Hudson, and Schenectady. Some of the other principal towns are Brooklyn, Sag Harbour, Newburgh, Poughkeepsie, Catskill, Athens, Lansingburgh, Waterford, Plattsburg, Whitehall, Goshen, Utica, Auburn, Geneva, Canandaigua, Waterloo, Sackett's Harbour, Rochester, and Buffalo.

Education. There are colleges in the city of New York, Schenectady, and Clinton; medical schools in New York and Fairfield; theological seminaries in New York and Auburn; a military academy at West Point; and about 70 academies in the state. The state possesses a fund amounting, in 1820, to $1,215,252, together with about 25,000 of land, the income of which is appropriated to the support of common schools: income $77,141. The number of children in the public schools, in 1821, was 332,979 equal to 24 25ths of all the children between 5 and 15 years of age.—The legislature for several years past has been honourably distinguished for its liberality in promoting education.

Religion. The denominations of Christians in this state, are Presbyterians, Associate Reformed Presbyterians, Dutch Reformed, Episcopalians, Baptists, Methodists, Friends, Lutherans, Moravians, Roman Catholics, Universalists, German Calvinists, Shakers, and Jews.

Government. The legislature is composed of a senate of 32 members, and a house of assembly, or representatives, consisting of 128 members. The senators are chosen for 4 years, one fourth being elected every year. The representatives are chosen annually. The governor and lieutenant governor are elected for 2 years. The annual elections are held on the last Tuesday in April and the two following days.

Canals. New York has, for several years, been engaged in improvements of its internal navigation on a scale heretofore unexampled in America. The excavation of the Erie Canal, which is to form a communication between the Hudson and lake Erie, was commenced on the 4th of July, 1817. Its course commences at Albany on the Hudson, passing along the south bank of the Mohawk, through the counties of Albany, Schenectady, Montgomery, Herkimer, and Oneida, to Rome; thence through the counties of Madison, Onondaga, Cayuga, Seneca, Ontario, Monroe, (crossing the Genesee at Rochester) Genesee, Niagara, and Erie, terminating at Buffalo on lake Erie; length about 365 miles. From the lake to Montezuma, about 170 miles, there is a descent of 194 feet, with 25 locks; thence to Rome, about 80 miles, there is an ascent of 49 feet; thence to the Hudson, 113 miles, a descent of 419 feet, with 46 locks. Lake Erie is 564 feet above the Hudson; and the rise and fall of the canal is 662 feet. The canal is 40 feet wide on the surface of the water, 28 at bottom, and 4 deep. It is navigated by boats carrying from 40 to 100 tons, drawn by 1, 2, 3, or more horses, at a rate not exceeding 5 miles an hour. In May, 1820, the navigation of the whole middle section from Utica to Montezuma, a distance of 96 miles, was opened; and the canal from Montezuma to Rochester, 63 miles, was opened early in the season of 1822.

Much has been done on the parts west of Genesee river, and east of Utica, and the whole is expected to be completed by the middle of the year 1824; in 7 years from its commencement. The whole expense was estimated by the commissioners at $4,881,738; $13,800 per mile. It is now expected that the expense will fall considerably short of the estimate. The expense of transporting a ton from Buffalo to New York, before the canal was begun, was reckoned at $100; when completed it will not exceed $10 or $11. Packet boats on the canal run at the rate of 90 or 100 miles in 24 hours. They have excellent accommodations for lodging and entertaining passengers, who are charged only 3 or 4 cents a mile. This canal, when completed, will be a source of a great revenue to the state, and bring a vast accession of trade to the city of New York. The net revenue from toll in 1821, amounted to $20,224,88.

Champlain, or the Northern canal, extends from Whitehall, at the entrance of Wood creek into lake Champlain, to Fort Edward on the Hudson, 22 miles. It is 40 feet wide on the surface of the water, 28 at bottom, and 4 deep. The descent from the summit level to lake Champlain is 54 feet; to the Hudson 30 feet. This canal was opened in the summer of 1820. On the west side of the Hudson a canal is constructed, beginning at Waterford and extending above the falls in the Hudson below Fort Edward. The whole distance by the canals from Waterford to Whitehall, is 62 miles. The expense of the canal from Whitehall to Fort Edward was about $260,000; from Fort Edward to Waterford estimated at $400,000.

Rivers and lakes. The principal rivers are the Hudson, Mohawk, St. Lawrence, Delaware, Susquehanna, Tioga, Alleghany, Genesee, Oswego, Niagara, Tonnewanta, Black, Oswegatchie, St. Regis, Racket, Salmon, and Saranac. A part of the lakes, Erie, Ontario, and Champlain, belongs to New York. The other lakes in this state are, lakes, George, Cayuga, Seneca, Oneida, Oswegatchie, Canandaigua, Chataque, Skeneatles, and several smaller ones.

Face of the country. The surface of the eastern part of the state of New York, is greatly diversified; there are some level tracts; but the greater part is hilly, or mountainous. The Catskill mountains are the principal range in the state. There are numerous summits west of lake Champlain, the highest of which is estimated at nearly 3,000 feet above the lake. The western part of the state is mostly a level, or moderately uneven country; but towards the Pennsylvania line it becomes hilly and broken.

Soil. A great part of this state has a good soil, and a considerable portion is celebrated for its fertility. Much of the country is excellent for grazing; and a great proportion is exceedingly well adapted to raising grain, and to the various purposes of agriculture. The level tracts in the western part have a deep rich soil, and yield abundant crops of Indian corn, wheat, &c. A considerable part of the state is under good cultivation, particularly the W. end of Long Island, and the counties of West-Chester and Dutchess.

Productions. Wheat is raised in greater abundance than any other kind of grain. Indian corn, rye, oats, flax, hemp, pease, beans, various kinds of grass, &c., are extensively cultivated. Orchards are abundant, and great quantities of excellent cider are made. Various other kinds of fruit flourish well, as pears, peaches in the southern part, plums, cherries, &c.

Minerals and springs. Iron ore is found in great abundance, in various parts. Gypsum, limestone, marble, slate, lead, &c., occur in different places. Salt springs are found in the counties of Onondaga, Cayuga, Seneca, Ontario, Genesee, and Oneida. In the town of Salina 554,776 bushels of salt were manufactured in 1820, and the quantity might be greatly increased. The mineral waters of New York, are the most celebrated in America. The waters of Saratoga and Ballston are visited from all parts of the union. New Lebanon springs are much resorted to for bathing. Sulphur springs are numerous; of these Clifton springs at Farmington, are the most noted. Oil springs, which produce Seneca oil, are found in Cataugus and Alleghany counties.

Curiosities. There are many natural curiosities in this state; the most celebrated of which is the great cataract of Niagara. Baker's and Glen's Falls on the Hudson, Adgate's Falls on Sable river, the Cohoes on the Mohawk, and the falls on the Genesee, Salmon river, Fall Creek, Black river, and West Canada Creek, are all objects of interest. The passage of the Hudson through the Highlands, Rockbridge in Chester, Split Rock on lake Champlain, the Ridge Road extending from the Genesee to Lewiston, and the scenery around lake George, are all regarded as curiosities.

Exports. The exports of New York exceed those of any other state in the union, and amounted, in 1816, to 19,690,031 dollars. They consist of beef, pork, wheat, flour, Indian corn, rye, butter, cheese, pot and pearl ashes, flaxseed, pease, beans, horses, cattle lumber, &c.

Manufactures. The manufactures are important and flourishing. In 1810, there were manufactured upwards of 9,000,000 yards of cloth; and about 525,000 bushels of salt. There were in the same year, 29 paper mills, 10 glass works, 2 powder mills, 11 blast furnaces, 10 air furnaces, 44 nail manufactories, 48 forges, and 26 cotton manufactories. The whole value of manufactures was 25,370,289 dollars.

Indians. The original inhabitants of the greater part of this state were the Iroquois or Six Nations. Their centre or capital was at Onondaga. The whole number of Indians in the state, in 1818, exclusive of the St. Regis Indians was 4,575. They have 9 reservations of land in the western part, amounting to 265,315 acres.

New-York, city & s-p. N. Y., on S. end Manhattan or New York island, at the confluence of the Hudson and East river; 90 NE. Philadelphia, 160 S. Albany, 210 SW. Boston, W. 227. Lon. 74. 1. W. Lat. 40. 43. N. Pop. in 1697, 4,302; in 1731, 8,628; in 1756, 10,381; in 1771, 21,863; in 1786, 23,614; in 1790, 33,131; 1800, 60,489; in 1810, 96,373; in 1820, 123,706.

The city and county of New York are of the same extent, and comprise the whole of New York island, which is 14 1-2 miles long, and from half to 2 miles broad. The compact part extends along the Hudson about 2 miles, and from the SW. corner of the Battery along East river nearly 4 miles, the breadth varies from half to nearly 2 miles, and the circuit is about 8. The city is divided into 10 wards, one of which comprises all the northern part of the island, with a population, in 1820, 11,162.

New York harbour is a large bay, which spreads 9 miles to the S. of the city, and is from 1 1-2 to 5 1-2 miles broad. It receives the Hudson in the N., East river in the NE., and has Long Island E., Staten Island and New Jersey W., and communicates with Newark bay on N. side by the Kills, and with the Atlantic S. by the Narrows. This bay embosoms several small islands, as Governor's island, Bedlow's island, and Ellis's island, which are near the city, and on each of which are fortifications. The currents here are very rapid and strong, and the harbour is seldom obstructed by ice, and has not been frozen over since 1780. It has every where sufficient depth of water for the largest vessels, where they may lie well secured from wind and storms. New York is the first commercial city in America, and one of the first in the world; it is admirably situated for trade, being at the mouth of a noble river, with an excellent harbour, and having an extensive, populous, and fertile back country. It imports most of the goods consumed between the Connecticut and the Raritan, and between the ocean and the lakes. The shipping owned here, in 1816, amounted to 299,617 tons; in 1821, 231,215 tons. The duties on imports, in 1821, amounted to $7,233,682.51.

Among the public buildings and institutions of this city, are a city hall, a custom house, a hospital, an alms house, a penitentiary, an orphan asylum, a jail, a bridewell, a state prison, an arsenal, a theatre, a museum, a circus, a university, an Episcopal theological seminary, an institution for the education of the deaf & dumb, the American Bible Society, 10 market houses, 11 banks with a capital of $13,900,000; 21 insurance offices with a capital of $10,600,000; a number of humane and benevolent societies, and 77 houses of public worship, Episcopalian 15, Presbyterian 11, Methodist 11, Dutch Reformed 9, Baptist 6, Associate Reformed 5, Independent 4, Quaker 3, Roman Catholic 2, Lutheran 1, Unitarian 1, Moravian 1, Swedenborgian 1, Universalist 1, Welsh 1, Mariners' 1, State prison chapel 1, St. Mathew's 1, British consul's church 1, Jews' synagogue 1.

The public buildings of New York are superior, in splendour and magnificence, to those of any other city in the United States; among these, the City Hall is pre-eminent, and is a most magnificent edifice. It is situated at the head of the Park, near Broadway, and is built of white marble, 216 feet in length, 105 in breadth, 51 high, and including the attic story, 65; and cost upwards of 500,000 dollars. St. John's, St. Paul's, Trinity church, Grace church, the Roman Catholic cathedral, and several other churches, are very spacious and elegant; a number of the churches are ornamented with steeples. The New York Hospital includes the Hospital for the reception of the sick and disabled, the Lunatic Asylum, and the Lying in Hospital. It is a well regulated establishment, and has a valuable library of about 3, or 4,000 volumes. The State Prison is situated on E. bank of the Hudson, 1 1-2 miles from the City Hall; it is built of free stone, having the principal front on Washington street; 204 feet in length, on its principal front, and 200 in depth on the wings. It is enclosed by a wall of stone from 14 to 23 feet high. Within the yard there is a brick building of 200 feet by 20, of 2 stories, containing the work shops. The alms house is situated at Bellevue, on East river, 2 miles from the City Hall. The principal building is of stone, 320 feet by 50, of 3 stories. In the rear of this, is the work house, which is 200 feet by 25. The Penitentiary is in the same inclosure, and is a stone building, 250 feet by 50, of 3 stories.—The city hotel is a magnificent brick edifice, of 5 stories, containing 78 rooms.—The New York Society Library contains about 15,000 volumes. In 1817 there were published 7 daily newspapers; 5 twice a week, (these are issued from the same offices as the daily papers;) and 5 once a week.—The number of lawyers in the city, in 1818, was 328; and in the state, 1,271.

Many of the streets near the harbour are crooked and narrow, but those which have been recently formed, are straight and spacious. The principal one is Broadway, which runs in a straight line, through the centre of the city, over the most elevated ground, and nearly equidistant from the two rivers; it is 3 miles long, and 30 feet wide, generally well built, and a part of it is very splendid. The other most important streets are Wall street, Pearl street, Greenwich street, Water street, and the Bowery. Wall street is an elegant street running from Broadway to East river. On this street are situated the custom house, banks, and insurance offices, and it is a place of immense business. Pearl street is the principal mercantile mart of the city. The Battery is a beautiful public walk on the southern extremity of the island, & containing several acres. The Park is a handsome common, in front of the City Hall, containing 6 acres. The houses were formerly built of wood, and a great part of them made but a mean appearance, but the modern houses are all of brick, mostly 3 stories high, generally well built, and many of them elegant.—New York, together with the surrounding objects, presents a magnificent and beautiful view on approaching it through the Narrows.—It is in a flourishing state and is fast increasing in population and improvements.

The New York Institution is a large brick edifice, 260 feet by 44, with two projections in front, 15 feet by 20. This building stands in the rear of the City Hall, and was formerly used for the almshouse, but its name has been changed to that of the New York Institution, and it is now occupied by the Literary and Philosophical Society; the Historical Society, which has a library of about 4,000 volumes; the American Academy of Fine Arts, which has a valuable collection of paintings. &c.; the New York Lyceum of Natural History, which has valuable scientific collections; and the American Museum, an extensive collection of curiosities.

The university of New York comprises all the colleges in the state: it is under the control of regents who fill their own vacancies, and have the appointment of the presidents and professors, except those of Columbia College. Columbia College was founded in 1754, and was called King's College till 1787, when it received its present name. It is situated in the central part of the city, on a square comprising several acres, enclosed by an iron railing. The building is of stone, 3 stories high above a basement, and 280 feet in length, containing a chapel, library, and lecture rooms; and dwellings for the president and professors. The students board and lodge with their parents, or in families, in the city. The legislative government is invested in 24 trustees; the executive, in a president and 5 professors, 1 of mathematics, 1 of moral philosophy, rhetoric, and belles lettres, 1 of Greek and Latin languages, also an adjunct professor of the same, and 1 of natural philosophy and chemistry. The college has a valuable philosophical apparatus and a library of 4, or 5,000 volumes. The number of students, in 1822, was 138. Commencement is held on the 1st Tuesday in August. After which there is a vacation till the 1st Monday in October.

The College of Physicians and Surgeons is a respectable and flourishing institution. The Medical College is a large and handsome brick edifice, and contains an anatomical museum, a chemical laboratory, a mineralogical cabinet, and a museum of natural history; all well furnished, and connected with the institution there is a large botanic garden. In the medical department, there are 9 professors, 1 of anatomy, 1 of surgery, 1 of the theory and practice of physic, 1 of materia medica, 1 of chemistry, 1 of obstetrics, 1 of natural history, comprehending botany and mineralogy, 1 of medical jurisprudence, and a clinical lecturer. The number of medical students, in 1821, was upwards of 200. The lectures commence early in November, and close the last of February.

Niagara, t. Niagara co. N.Y., on the Niagara, at the falls; S. of Lewiston, 320 W. Albany. Pop. 484.

Niagara, r. N. A. a part of the great stream of the St. Lawrence, which flows from lake Erie into lake Ontario, dividing Canada from New York. It flows from S. to N., 35 miles long. At its efflux from the lake, it is 3-4ths of a mile wide, from 40 to 60 feet deep, having a current of about 7 miles an hour. In its progress it spreads to the width of 6 or 7 miles, embosoming several islands, the largest of which are Grand and Navy islands, which terminate 1 1-2 m. above the falls.

The cataract of Niagara is esteemed the grandest object of the kind in the world. The distance of the falls above lake Ontario is 14 miles, and below lake Erie 23 miles on the American side, 21 on the Canada side. At the distance of 1 3-4 m. above the falls the river begins to descend with a rapid and powerful current. At the falls it turns with a right angle to the NE., and is suddenly contracted in width from 3 miles to 3-4ths of a mile. Below the falls the river is only about 1-2 m. wide, but its depth is said to exceed 300 feet. The precipice over which the cataract descends, is formed by the brow of a vast bed of lime stone; and the perpendicular descent, according to major Prescott's survey, is 151 feet. The descent is perpendicular, except that the rocks are hollowed underneath the surface, particularly on the western side. The cataract is divided into two parts by Goat or Iris island, which occupies about one 5th or 6th of the whole breadth. The principal channel is on the western side, and is called the Horse-shoe fall from its shape. The eastern channel is divided by another little island. The descent on the eastern side is greater by a few feet than on the other, but the water is more shallow. The noise of these falls is frequently heard at York, 50 miles distant; and the cloud of vapour thrown is seen 70 miles. The descent within 10 miles is about 300 feet, and from lake Erie to lake Ontario 329 feet. The quantity of water discharged in an hour, is computed, by Dr. Dwight, at 102,093,750 tons. The spray which rises from the water, serves as a medium for forming by the sun's rays the most brilliant rainbows.

"The emotions excited by a view of this stupendous scene," in the language of Dr. Dwight, "are unutterable. When the spectator casts his eye over the long ranges of ragged cliffs, which form the shores of this great river below the cataract; cliffs 150 feet in height, bordering it with lonely gloom and grandeur, and shrouded every where by shaggy forests; when he surveys the precipice above, stretching with so great an amplitude, rising to a great height, and presenting at a single view its awful brow, with an impression not a little enhanced by the division, which the island forms between the two great branches of the river; when he contemplates the enormous mass of water pouring from this astonishing height in sheets so vast, and with a force so amazing; when turning his eye to the flood beneath, he beholds the immense convulsion of the mighty mass; and listens to the majestic sound which fills the heavens; his mind is overwhelmed by thoughts too great, and by impressions too powerful, to permit the current of the intellect to flow with serenity. The disturbance of his mind resembles that of the waters beneath him. His bosom swells with emotions never felt, his thoughts labour in a manner never known before. The pleasure is exquisite but violent. The conceptions are clear and strong, but rapid and tumultuous. The struggle within is discovered by the fixedness of his position, the solemnity of his aspect, and the intense gaze of his eye. When he moves, his motions appear uncontrived. When he is spoken to, he is silent; or if he speaks, his answers are short, wandering from the subject, and indicating that absence of mind, which is the result of labouring contemplation.

"All these impressions are heightened to a degree which cannot be conjectured, by the slowly ascending volumes of mist, rolled and tossed into a thousand forms by the varying blast; and by the splendour of the rainbow successively illuminating their bosom. At the same time the spectator cannot but reflect that he is surveying the most remarkable object on the globe. Nor will he fail to remember, that he stands upon a river, in most respects equal, and in several of high distinction superior to every other; or that the inland seas which it empties, the mass of waters which it conveys, the commercial advantages which it furnishes, and the grandeur of its disruption in the spring, are all suitable accompaniments of so sublime and glorious a scene."

Nicaragua, pr. Guatemala, bounded N. by Honduras, E. by the North sea, S. by Costa Rica and the Pacific ocean, and W. by Guatemala and the Pacific ocean. The winter in this province, is rainy and tempestuous ; the summer excessively hot, but healthy. It is reckoned the most woody part of Spanish N. America. It produces good flax and hemp, together with the wood used by the dyers in Europe, called Nicaragua wood ; but little wheat. It abounds with black cattle and hogs, but sheep are scarce. Balm, cotton, sugar, American pepper, liquid amber, and turpentine, are here produced in very great plenty ; with which, and the produce of their silver mines, the inhabitants carry on a considerable trade with Panama and Nombre de Dios. It abounds in turkies ; and parrots were so numerous, that they became a nuisance. The country itself is so pleasant as well as fruitful, that it is considered as the garden of America ; the hills and sands of the rivers abound with gold, and the fields and woods are perfumed with odoriferous plants and flowers ; so that when the Spaniards first visited it, they called it Mahomet's Paradise. Chief town, Leon.

Nicaragua, lake, Guatemala, 100 leagues in circumference. 120 miles in length, and 41 in breadth. The water in it flows and ebbs like the sea. Nicca, t. Cherso, in the Adriatic ; 20 W. Cherso.

Nice, or Nizza, county, Italy, in SW. of Piedmont, forming a province of the kingdom of Sardinia, lying on the west side of the Alps, and anciently a part of Narbonne Gaul ; bounded N. by the Maritime Alps, E. by Monaco and Genoa, S. by the Mediterranean, and W. by the French dep. of Var. Sq. m. 1,230. Pop. 91,250. The chief towns are Nice, Villa Franca, and Sospello. The surface is mostly composed of mountains and narrow valleys. In the northern part there is little else than pasturage ; but in the south, olives, wine, and fruit are abundant. Honey is an important article of produce.

Nice, (an. Nicæa,) t. Italy, capital of the above province ; 90 ENE. Marseilles, 92 SW. Genoa, 92 S. by W. Turin. Lon. 7. 17. E. Lat. 43. 41. N. Pop. 18,475. It is delightfully situated on the Mediterranean, at the mouth of the Paglion, at the foot of an amphitheatre of hills, covered with villas, gardens, and groves of orange and lemon trees. It is surrounded with a rampart, and divided into old and new town ; the streets of the former are crowded and narrow, but those of the latter are tolerably straight and regular. The houses in the new town and in the suburb called the Marble Cross, are extremely neat ; their walls are painted in fresco, which gives them a cheerful appearance ; and they are surrounded with gardens, planted with orange and lemon trees. There are two public squares, one of them very handsome. The only public edifice of importance is the cathedral. Nice contains a theatre, public baths, coffee houses, a library, delightful walks, and has good society ; offering more attractions than most continental towns in Europe of its size, and is a favourite resort of foreigners, especially the English.—The harbour spacious and safe, admitting vessels of 300 tons. The exports consist chiefly in oil, wine, and silk ; also in liquors, essences, perfumery, &c.

Nicosia, or Lefkosia, (an. Ledra,) t. & capital of Cyprus. Lon. 33. 2. E. Lat. 35. 12. N. Pop. 10 or 15,000. Greek abp. see, and Armenian bp. see. It contains 4 mosques. It is situated in the centre of the island, in the middle of a vast plain, and surrounded by hills and mountains, which bound it on all sides, at the distance of 10 miles. From the time of Constantine the Great, till 1567, the circumference of this city was 9 miles; but the Venetians found it too extensive, and reduced it to three. The city, under the family of the Lusignans, was the residence of the kings. It contained a great many monasteries, 300 churches, Greek and Latin, and a number of palaces and public buildings. The year 1570 was fatal to the city of Nicosia, and the whole island. In June, of the same year, Mustapha, the Turkish general, entered it at the head of 100,000 infantry, and 10,000 horse. Of 50,000 people, who had retired within the walls for shelter, 20,000 were massacred, and the rest put in irons.

The most beautiful edifice here is the church of St. Sophia, where the kings of Cyprus were formerly crowned. The church of St. Nicholas is at present the bezesten, a kind of hall, where all sorts of provisions are sold. The principal, Turkish, Greek, and Armenian merchants, assemble here to transact commercial business. The bazar, or market place, is extensive and lively, well supplied with provisions, and remarkably clean.

Niger, a great river of Central Africa, which has in modern times excited an extraordinary interest, by reason of the contradictory accounts respecting its course and termination. To ascertain these has long been a grand geographical problem, in prosecuting which much property has been spent, and many lives sacrificed. The name Niger is not known in Africa. The river is called by the negroes Joli-ba ; the Moors call it Neel Abeede or the Nile of the Negroes. It is also called Guin, or Jin ; also Neel Kibbeer, or Great River.

The Niger rises from the eastern side of the mountains, which form the boundary of Fouta Jallo, not a great distance from the sources of the Senegal and Gambia, about Lat. 11. N. Lon. between 6. and 7. W. Pursuing a course E. by N. it passes by Bammakoo, Yamina, Sego, Sansanding, Silla, Jenne, through lake Dibbie, by Cabra the port of Tombuctoo ; thence plunging into the unknown regions of the interior of Africa. The length of its course from its source, to Silla, including its windings, is estimated at nearly 1,000 miles ; and at Sego, according to Park, it is as broad as the Thames at Westminster.—According to Park the navigation commences at Bammakoo, where the river is a mile wide ; but it is represented by M'Queen as navigable 400 miles before reaching Bammakoo.

The opinion, which after the discoveries of Park became prevalent, was that of Major Renel, coinciding in some measure with the previous one of D'Anville, by which the Niger, after issuing from the lake Dibbie, was supposed to flow eastward through the countries of Houssa and Cassina, till it was lost in the lakes and marshes of the Wangara ; or as some have represented, into the sea of Soudan, a large lake or sea, said to exist in the interior of Africa.

Another hypothesis is that the Niger and Nile are the same river. According to Jackson and Horneman this hypothesis is universally believed by the Moors and Arabs ; and its probability is countenanced by the late travellers Burckhardt, Ritchie, and others.

A third hypothesis is that the Niger after a long course through Central and Southern Africa, empties itself into the ocean by the estuary of the Zaire or Congo. This was originally suggested to Mungo Park by a captain Maxwell, who, in the character of a slave dealer had been accustomed to visit the Congo. His opinion was founded on the vast quantity of water which it poured into the ocean, and on a rise taking place when no rains had fallen on the southern side of the line. The public mind was so strongly impressed by the arguments in favour of this hypothesis, that the British government were induced to fit out an expedition to ascertain the fact. The expedition was divided into two parts, one military, commanded by major Peddie, the other naval, commanded by captain Tuckey. All the leaders of the party under major Paddie, fell a sacrifice to the climate before they approached the Niger; and the party under captain Tuckey were seized with a pestilential disorder, which proved fatal to most of them. They penetrated 300 or 400 miles up the Congo, but could observe nothing decisive as to its origin.

A fourth hypothesis is that the Niger after passing through Wangara, turns to the SW. and pours itself into the gulf of Guinea, through the great channels that intersect the Delta of Benin. This is the theory of Reichard, countenanced by Malte-Brun, and zealously supported by M'Queen. This hypothesis is rendered probable by the number and magnitude of the rivers which flow into the gulf of Guinea. The number from Rio Lagos to Cross river inclusive exceeds 20; the aggregate sum of their widths is computed by M'Queen at 50 miles, of which three, viz. the Rio Formosa, the chief outlet of Bonny, and the estuary of Old Calabar and Cross rivers, make 27 miles. The depth of these rivers is said to exceed that of rivers of the first magnitude at their mouths. M'Queen computes the whole length of the Niger from its source to the gulf at 2,600.

It is a well built, staple town, and one of the most ancient cities in Sweden, and was formerly the residence of the kings and princes of Sudermanland. It has two handsome churches, a commodious harbour, several manufactures of cloth and Morocco leather, a brass hammer mill, and drives a considerable trade by sea. The Swedish language is supposed to be spoken in its greatest purity at Nikioping, and its environs. Without this town is a royal inclosure, and the adjacent country is fertile.

Nile, r. Africa, one of the most celebrated in the world. To ascertain the sources of this river has been an object of great interest from early ages. According to Herodotus, Pliny, and other ancient writers, the Nile rises in the western part of Africa. These authors appear to have held the opinion, still retained by some moderns, that the Niger and Nile are the same river. According to Mr. Bruce and others, the Bahr el Azrek, which rises from the mountains of Abyssinia, is the principal head of the Nile: but since the time of Bruce, it has been ascertained by Browne that the Bahr el Abiad, which rises from the mountains of Donga, called by the ancients the Mountains of the Moon, is better entitled, both from the length of its course and the magnitude of its stream, to the honour of being considered the principal source of the Egyptian Nile. These two rivers unite about Lat. 16. N. (See Bahr el Abiad, and Bahr el Azreh.) After the junction of these two rivers the Nile having flowed a considerable distance, receives the Tacazze; after which, in the course of about 1,000 miles, it is not fed by any river, scarcely even by the smallest rivulet.

The Nile after having passed through Dongola and Nubia, enters Egypt at Syene, traverses the country through its whole extent, and flows into the Mediterranean in Lat. 31. 25. N. In passing through Upper Egypt the river is confined between two mountain ranges, which leave only a narrow strip on each side. Near Cairo the valley widens, and the river separates into branches. In ancient times it flowed into the Mediterranean by 7 mouths; but only 2 branches of any importance now remain, those of Rosetta and Damietta.

A little above Syene are the famous cataracts of the Nile, which, however, are far from corresponding to the magnificent descriptions given of them by the ancients. Mr. Legh describes that at Syene as formed merely by the river forcing its way, in a contracted channel, through rocks. According to Mr. Burckhardt the cataract a few miles higher up, is little more considerable. Norden estimated the descent at only 4 feet. Pococke mentions 3 cataracts, the 1st of 3 feet, the 2d of 5, the 3d thought to be greater. The boats of the Arabs ascend and descend these rapids.

The inundation of the Nile, which produces all that fertility for which Egypt is distinguished, is occasioned by the periodical rains which fall from June to Sept. throughout the northern tropical regions. The rise begins to be perceived about the 17th June and continues till August, when the river is at its height, and all the level parts of the country are overflowed. On the plain of the Delta the inundation takes place spontaneously; but in Upper Egypt artificial means of irrigation are employed. Of the canals for conveying the water, that of Cairo is the principal, and is opened when the river has obtained the height of 32 feet. The ceremony forms a national festival, and is celebrated by the most extravagant marks of joy. The waters leave a slime more or less thick, which fertilizes the country.

The course of the Nile is upwards of 2,000 miles in length; by some stated at 2,500; but it is narrow in proportion to its length, being only from 1-4 to 1-2 a mile wide. It flows only about 3 miles an hour. Its waters are always turbid, and it has a variety of fish.

Nimeguen, or Nimwegen, (an. Noviomagus), city, Neth. capital of a district, in Guelderland, on the S. side of the Wahal; 50 SE. Amsterdam. Lon. 5. 51. E. Lat. 51. 51. N. Pop. 13,326. Though not ill built, the streets are narrow, and the town has an irregular appearance. It was formerly the capital of Guelderland, and also the chief town of Betuwe, or Batavia, the country of the ancient Batavia. It has 13 gates, and is defended by an ancient fortress called Vlack-Hof, and several other fortifications. The churches are in general handsome structures; the town-house is remarkable for its beauty and magnificence. Pale beer is the only article of manufacture for which the town is celebrated.

In this city was held the celebrated congress of plenipotentiaries of almost all the powers of Europe, who concluded a treaty of peace the 30th of July, 1678; between Spain and France, on the 6th of September; between France and the United Provinces, and between the emperor and France, and between the emperor and Sweden, in January 1679.

Nineveh, or Ninus, city & capital of Assyria, on the Tigris. It was one of the most ancient, large, powerful, and famous cities of the world, 48 miles in circuit, surrounded by a wall 100 feet high, on the top of which three chariots could pass together abreast; and defended by 1,500 towers, each 200 feet high. In the time of the prophet Jonah, it was reckoned to contain more than 120,000 persons, who could not distinguish between the right hand and the left, i.e. young children; whence it is inferred, that the number of inhabitants, at that time, amounted to 600,000.—Modern travellers inform us that the ruins of Nineveh may be seen on the E. bank of the Tigris, opposite to Mosul. See Nunia.

Nippon, or Hiphon, principal island of Japan, in the N. Pacific ocean. Lon. 130. to 140. E. Lat. 33. 45. to 40. N. Its form is very irregular, not unlike that of a jaw-bone, with a vast number of windings, so that it is not easy to ascertain its true circumference; it is computed to be about 1,600 miles at least. Its length from SW. to NE. is upwards of 700 miles, its breadth generally less than 200. It was divided, in the times of the dairos, into 53 or 55 kingdoms, all tributary to them; but since the cubos deprived these monarchs of their secular power, those divisions have not only undergone very great changes, but have since been in a state of continual fluctuation. Each of these has its capital, besides a number of other considerable towns. The 5 principal cities in this island are Jeddo, Meaco, Osacca, Surunga, and Saccai.

Nismes, or Nimes, (an. Nemansus), city, France, capital of Gard; 5 3-4 posts NE. Montpellier, 90 SSE. Paris. Lon. 4. 21. E. Lat. 43. 50. N. Pop. 39,594, of whom 25,000 are Protestants. H. 4,500. Bp. see. It is large, and pleasantly situated on the side of a hill, covered with vineyards and orchards of fruit, at some distance from a small river, called the Vistre. It contains an academy, a royal college with a library, an academy of arts and sciences, a society of medicine, and other institutions.

The manufactures are various; those of cloth and silk are very large; 20,000 pair of stockings are said to be made annually. The city is ancient, and was formerly very large and magnificent, before it was taken and sacked by the Goths. Considerable vestiges of Roman magnificence yet remain, and are spoken of by travellers with admiration; among others, are an amphitheatre, a temple of Diana, a grand tower, supposed to have been a mausoleum, a public fountain, and a maison quarée, which last is a temple of the Corinthian order, in exquisite taste, raised by the inhabitants of Nismes, in the year of Rome 744, to the memory of Caius and Lucius, sons of Agrippa.—Natives, J. Saurin, B. J. Saurin, Nicot, and Florian.

Nootka, (or King George's Island, isl. in Nootka sound. Lon. 126. 40. W. Lat. 49. 35. N.

Nootka Sound, bay of the N. Pacific ocean, on W. coast of N. America, discovered by Capt. Cook, in 1778. The entrance is situated in the east corner of Hope bay, Lon. 126. 36. W. Lat. 49. 35. N. Capt. Cook says, we enter this sound between 2 rocky points, that lie ESE. and WNW. from each other, distant between 3 and 4 miles. In the middle of the sound are a number of islands of various sizes. The depth of water in the middle of the sound, and even close home to some parts of its shore, is from 47 to 90 fathoms, and perhaps more. The harbours and anchoring places within its circuit are numerous. The land bordering upon the sea coast is of a middling height and level; but within the sound it rises almost every where into steep hills, which agree in their general formation, ending in round or blunted tops, with some sharp, though not very prominent ridges on their sides. The climate, as far as we had any experience of it, is infinitely milder than that on the E. coast of N. America, under the same parallel of latitude. The trees which chiefly compose the woods, are the Canadian pine, white cypress, the wild pine, with 2 or 3 other sorts of pine less common. The two first make up almost two-thirds of the whole. The trees in general grow with great vigour, and are all of a large size.

The persons of the natives are, in general, under the common stature; but not slender in proportion, being commonly pretty full, or plump, though not muscular. Two towns or villages seem to be the only inhabited parts of the sound. The number of inhabitants in both might be 2,000 in the whole. The houses are disposed in 3 ranges, or rows, rising gradually behind each other; the largest being that in front, and the others less, besides a few straggling or single ones at each end.

Norfolk, co. Mass., bounded NW. & W. by Middlesex co., E. by Boston Harbour, S. by Plymouth and Bristol cos., and W. by Rhode Island and Worcester co. Pop. in 1810, 31,245; in 1820, 36,471. Chief town, Dedham.

Norfolk, p-t. Litchfield co. Ct.; 18 N. Litchfield, 35 WNW. Hartford, 42 ESE. Hudson, W. 358. Pop. 1,422. The township is mountainous, but has generally a good soil for grazing.

Norfolk, co. SE. part of Va., bounded N. by Hampton Road and Chesapeake bay, E. by Princess Anne co., S. by N. C. and W. by Nansemond co. Pop. in 1810, 13,679; slaves, 5,647. Pop. in 1822, 15,478. Chief towns, Norfolk and Portsmouth.

Norfolk, bor. and port of entry, Norfolk co. Va., on NE. bank of Elizabeth river, 8 miles above its entrance into Hampton road, and 32 from the sea, 110 by water below City Point, 112 ESE. Richmond, W. 229. Lon. 76. 42. W. Lat. 37. 12. N. Pop. in 1810, 9,193; in 1820, 8,478. It contains a court house, a jail, a market house, a theatre, 2 insurance offices, 3 banks, including a branch of the U. S. bank, an academy, an orphan asylum, a Lancasterian school, an atheneum containing about 1,000 volumes, and 6 houses of public worship, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Presbyterians, 2 for Baptists, 1 for Roman Catholics, and 1 for Methodists. The ground on which the town is built, is level, low, and in some places marshy. The streets are irregular, crooked, and in some parts dirty. The principal ones, however, are paved, kept clean, and well lighted. But few of the houses are remarkable for elegance. Two or three of the churches are neat buildings, but none of them are ornamented with steeples. The Farmer's Bank is a large structure, built in an elegant style. The orphan asylum supports about 20 orphan children, and has an elegant brick building. The Lancasterian school has a commodious brick building, and from 200 to 300 scholars. This town affords much agreeable society, and the inhabitants are distinguished for their hospitality.

Norfolk has more foreign commerce than any other town in the state. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1821, amounted to 23,809 tons. The harbour is a beautiful basin, nearly a mile wide, and is safe and commodious. It is effectually defended by 3 forts; Fort Norfolk, a strong fortification, on NE. side of Elizabeth river, about a mile below the town; Fort Nelson, on SW. side of the river, a little higher up, just below the town of Portsmouth; and a large and strong fort on Craney island, 5 miles below the town. On Washington Point, between the E. and W. branches of the river, about a mile from Norfolk, there is a marine hospital, which is a handsome brick building. About a mile from the town, on the opposite side of the river, is the town of Portsmouth; and a little higher up the river, is the village of Gosport, containing a large U. S. navy yard.

Norfolk, co. Eng. bounded N. and NE. by the German ocean, S. and SE. by Suffolk, and W. by Cambridgeshire, Lincolnshire, and the Washes. It is almost insulated by the sea and rivers. Length from E. to W. 74; breadth 48. Acres 1,238,000. Sq. m. 2,013; 220 light sand, 420 good sand, 60 marsh land clay, 900 various loams, 148 rich loams, 82 peat land. About two thirds of the county consist of arable lands, kept in a state of tillage, and agriculture is carried to a high degree of improvement. Wheat is the general crop; also barley, oats, turnips, rye, beans, peas, &c. The principal towns are Norwich, the capital, Yarmouth, and Lynn. Pop. in 1811, 291,999. H. 51,776. Families employed in agriculture 31,554; in trade and manufactures 23,084; others 8,279.

Norfolk Island, isl. in the S. Pacific ocean, about 15 miles in circumference, discovered by Capt. Cook in the year 1774, who says, "We found it uninhabited, & were undoubtedly the first that ever set foot on it." A settlement was made on this island by a detachment from Port Jackson, under the conduct of Lieutenant King, in the year 1783. The number of inhabitants, on the island, a few years since, was about 1,000. It is well wooded, fertile, and produces various fruits and vegetables. Lon. 168. 10. E. Lat. 29. 3. S.

North West Territory, U. S., bounded N. by Upper Canada and lake Superior, E. by Michigan territory, S. by Illinois, and W. & SW. by the Mississippi. Lon. 84. to 96. W. Lat. 42. 20. to 49. 37. N. Sq. m. about 140,000. It contains only 2 settlements, one at the head of Green bay where is Fort Howard, the other at the junction of the Ouisconsin with the Mississippi, called Prairie du Chien, where is Fort Crawford.—There are military garrisons at both. The rest of the country is possessed by tribes of Indians, as Winnebagoes, Menomonies, Fox Indians, Chippeways, &c.

The principal rivers are the Mississippi, Ouisconsin, Fox, Menomonie, Chippeway, Coppermine, Rocky, Montreal, St. Croix, St. Louis, and Ontonagon. The country has been but imperfectly explored. The northern part bordering on lake Erie is wild, rough, sometimes mountainous, and generally sterile. On the rivers are alluvial bottoms of very rich soil. The tract of country containing the sources of the rivers Mississippi, St. Lawrence, and Red river of lake Winnipeg, is wet and swampy. The most remarkable vegetable production is wild rice, a productive and valuable aquatic plant, with which the lakes and rivers of this country abound. It grows in water from 4 to 7 feet deep, and is gathered by the Indians in canoes; it grows in such abundance that a canoe is soon filled. The mineral productions are very important. In the SW. near Prairie du Chien are very extensive and rich lead mines, in possession, chiefly of the Fox Indians. Copper mines are found on the Ontonagon near lake Superior.

Northampton, t. Rockingham co. N. H.; 10 SW. Portsmouth. Pop. 764.

Northampton, p-t. & cap. Hampshire co. Mass., on W. bank of Connecticut river, opposite to Hadley, with which it is connected by a bridge, 1,060 feet long; 18 N. Springfield, 21 S. Greenfield, 40 E. Pittsfield, 46 N. Hartford, 95 W. Boston, W. 385. Lat. 42. 16. N. Pop. in 1810, 2,631; in 1820, 2,854. The compact part of the town is delightfully situated, and contains a very elegant brick court house, a stone jail, a very handsome and spacious meeting house, 100 feet by 76, a bank, an insurance office, a valuable cabinet of minerals and natural curiosities, a printing office, from which is issued a weekly newspaper, and 17 trading stores. A fine rivulet passes near the centre of the town, on which are erected numerous mills and manufactories, among which are a paper mill, 2 tanneries, one of which is accounted inferior to none in the country, and 2 woollen manufactories, at one of which are finished 20, and at the other 42 yards of cloth daily. Northampton is one of the most pleasant and agreeable towns in the state; many of its houses are elegant; the situation of a number of them is much admired, and the surrounding scenery is romantic and beautiful. In the vicinity of the town are Mount Tom and Mount Holyoke, which see. It is an excellent agricultural town, and has fertile meadows of several thousand acres, which are annually enriched by the spring floods.

Northampton, t. Eng. and capital of a county to which it gives name; 43 NE. Oxford, 66 NNW. London. Lon. 0. 54. W. Lat. 52. 15. N. Pop. 8,427. H. 1,600. It is situated on an eminence, by the side of the river Nen, which bounds it on the SW., and over which are two bridges. It is an ancient town, and was formerly surrounded with walls, and defended by a castle. It consists of 4 principal streets, wide and commodious, and meeting at right angles; with various smaller ones branching off from them. The town is handsome, and the houses well built, mostly of a kind of free stone. There were formerly 7 parish churches, now only 4; besides houses of worship for Presbyterians, Baptists, Quakers, and Methodists. The Castle-hill meeting is a large building, in which the celebrated Dr. Doddridge preached for 22 years. The principal manufactures are those of boots and shoes; also lace. It is a great thoroughfare, both on the north and west roads. The horse market here was formerly the greatest in the kingdom. It sends 2 members to parliament. Markets on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday.

Northamptonshire, co. Eng. bounded N. by Lincolnshire; E. by Cambridgeshire, Huntingdonshire, and Bedfordshire; S. by Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire; W. by Oxfordshire and Warwickshire; and NW. by Leicestershire and Rutland; about 60 miles in length from NE. to SW., and from 14 to 24 in breadth. It is divided into 20 hundreds, which contain one city, Peterborough, 13 towns, 336 parishes, 618,000 acres. Sq. m. 965. Pop. in 1811, 141,353. H.

28,318. Families engaged in agriculture 15,235; in trade and manufactures 12,100; others 3,525. Towards the north-east, the land is intersected and surrounded by rivers, and subject to inundations, forming the beginning of the fenny tract, which extends through the Isle of Ely to the Lincolnshire washes. Elsewhere, Northamptonshire is considered proverbially as a fine and pleasant county, which opinion is confirmed by the number of noblemen's and gentlemen's seats contained in it. Its greatest defect is the scarcity of wood.

Northumberland, co. Eng. bounded NW. and N. by Scotland, E. by the German sea, S. by Durham, and W. Cumberland; of a triangular form; its greatest length 64 miles, and greatest breadth 48, and about 232 miles in circ. It is divided into 6 wards, which contain 13 towns, and 460 parishes. Acres 1,184,000. Sq. m. 1,850. Pop. 172,161. H. 28,253. Families employed in agriculture 10,945; in trade and manufactures 16,547; others 10,251. Under the heptarchy, it was part of the kingdom of Northumbria, which comprehended all the country between the two seas, N. of the Humber to the Edinburgh Frith. The soil is various; on the rivers and sea-coast remarkably fertile; to the NW. and SW. very mountainous; to the W. full of heaths, fens, and lakes, some of the former abounding with mines of ore and coal, and others cultivated; and the mountains feed large quantities of sheep. A late survey supposes that 817,200 acres of land are proper for the plough, and 450,000 are mountainous and improper for tillage, making in the whole 1,267,200. The towns are Newcastle, Berwick, Morpeth, Alnwick, Belford, Bellingham, Blythe, Haltwesel, Hexham, Rothbury, Shields, Timmouth, and Wooler.

Towns. The principal towns are Christiania, the capital, Bergen, Drontheim, Christiansand, Fredershall, and Stavanger, all seaports; Conisberg and Roraas, mine towns.

Face of the country, &c. Norway is one of the most mountainous countries in Europe, and abounds in sublime scenery. It is separated from Sweden by the Dofrafield, an immense chain more than 1,000 miles in length. The mountains are generally barren, but the valleys are not deficient in the products of high latitudes. The rivers are numerous, but partake frequently of the nature of torrents, abounding in cataracts. The largest are the Glomme, Louven, and Nyd.

Climate. The climate is very severe, though healthy; the soil often stony and barren; but in the southern part there are tracts of considerable fertility. The grain raised is not sufficient for the inhabitants; but pasture is more abundant, and cattle are exported.

Productions. The reindeer constitutes the chief wealth of Norwegian Lapland. The mountains are covered with pine, ash, and especially fir. There are mines of iron, copper, loadstone, salt, marble, lead, silver, and gold. The herring and cod fisheries are valuable. The principal exports are lumber, iron, and fish.

Inhabitants. The Norwegians are accustomed to a plain style of living, as to diet and dwelling, in the remote parts, in seasons of scarcity, they are in the habit of lengthening out their scanty stores by mixing pine bark with their bread. Education is in a backward state. There is a university at Christiania, and seminaries at Bergen, Conisberg, and Drontheim. The religion is Lutheran. There are 5 bishops, 49 deans, and 329 pastors. Norway, since 1814, has been governed as a province of Sweden.

Norwich, p-t. Windsor co. Vt., on the Connecticut, opposite to Hanover, with which it is connected by a bridge; 18 N. Windsor, 18 NE. Woodstock, 115 NW. Boston, W. 482. Pop. 1,985. It is a pleasant town, and contains 3 houses of public worship, 2 for Congregationalists and 1 for Methodists, and a woollen manufactory. The village is pleasantly situated on ground elevated 439 feet above tide water, about 170 above the Connecticut opposite to it, one mile distant from Dartmouth College, and contains a Congregational meeting house and a number of elegant dwelling houses.—Here is an institution styled the “American Literary, Scientific, and Military Academy,” established by captain Alden Partridge, and first opened in Sept. 1820, under his immediate direction and superintendence. The building is of brick, 100 feet by 40, of 4 stories, containing 3 lecture rooms, and 42 rooms for students. It is surrounded by an enclosure, extending 15 rods along the principal street, and 24 rods back. There are 7 teachers; the number of students, in 1822, was 120. The exercise, discipline, and punishments in the seminary are all military; and the students are subjected to a very regular course of life, and are all dressed in a neat but cheap uniform. The time not devoted to study and sleep is spent in military exercises. They are carried through a course of classical learning, mathematics and philosophy, general literature, and military science. Those students who are destined for a college education, may be prepared to enter as freshmen, or one or two years in advance.

Norwich, t. Hampshire co. Mass.; 7 WSW. Northampton, 150 W. Boston. Pop. 849.

Norwich, city, New London co. Ct., on the Thames, at the head of navigation; 13 N. New London, 36 SE. by E. Hartford, 45 WSW. Providence, W. 367. Lon. 72.29. W. Lat. 41.34. N. Pop. 2,983; including the township 3,634. It contains a court house, a jail, a bank, 2 insurance offices, and 6 houses of public worship, 2 for Congregationalists, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Baptists, and 2 for Methodists. It consists of 3 parts, Chelsea Landing, the Town, and Bean Hill. Chelsea Landing is situated on the point of land between the Shetucket and Yantic, which here unite to form the Thames. The site is on the declivity of a hill, high, irregular, and rocky. It contains upwards of 150 dwelling houses, 4 houses of public worship, a post office, and upwards of 30 stores. The Town, 2 miles NW., is situated in a pleasant vale, partially surrounded by lofty hills. It contains a handsome square, a court house, a post office, meeting house, and about 200 houses and stores. Bean Hill, is a pleasant settlement, on the Hartford road, in the western part, chiefly on one street.

Norwich is a pleasant town, and considerable both for trade and manufactures. It is favourably situated at the head of navigation, and has an extensive back country. The commercial business is much less than formerly; about 12 vessels are owned here, employed chiefly in the coasting trade to New-York and elsewhere. The falls of the river afford seats for various mills and manufacturing establishments. The courts for the county are held alternately at this city and New London.

Norwich, p-t. & cap. Chenango co. N. Y., on the Chenango; 8 N. Oxford, 100 W. Albany, W. 337. Pop. 3,257. It has a pleasant and flourishing village, which contains a court house and jail.

Norwich, city, Eng. capital of Norfolk; 22 W. Yarmouth, its port, 108 NE. by N. London. Lon. 1. 17. E. Lat. 52. 58. N. Pop. in 1752, 36,159; in 1786, 40,051; in 1801, 36,854; in 1811, 37,256. H. 8,763. Bp. see. It is situated on the Wensom, a branch of the Yare, which is navigable up to the town, and joins the Yare a little below the town; over the river are 6 bridges, one of which is of iron. It is about 2 miles long, built on the slope and summit of a gentle hill, was formerly surrounded by an embattled wall, & makes a striking appearance from an eminence in the neighbourhood. The streets, except the market place and St. Giles's street, are narrow and ill disposed, but there are many good buildings. It contains a castle, a cathedral, 36 churches, various dissenting places of worship, the Norfolk and Norwich hospital, insane hospital, and numerous other charitable institutions. The chief public edifices are the castle and the cathedral. The castle built in the 6th century, and now used as a jail, stands in the centre of the city, of which it commands a fine view. The cathedral is one of the most spacious and handsome buildings of the kind in the kingdom. It is of Norman architecture, founded in the 11th century; 411 feet long, and 315 to the top of the tower.

Norwich is situated in a rich and populous district, and is the principal town in the eastern part of England, and has long been noted for its trade and extensive manufactures. It has a very considerable share of the woollen manufactures of the country. In 1724, in and about the city, 120,000 persons were employed in this business; it has latterly rather declined. The principal articles are bombazines, worsted damasks, flowered satins, and fine camblets. To these have been lately added the manufacture of cottons, shawls, other fancy goods of the best quality; cotton and thread lace, linen, &c. It sends 2 members to parliament. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.—Norwich is a very ancient city, and has repeatedly suffered by the plague and fire. In 1348, nearly 58,000 are said to have been carried off by the plague.

Notch, (The), a pass in the western part of the White mountains, N. H. The narrowest part is between two perpendicular rocks, and is only 22 feet wide. The road from Lancaster to Portland passes through this notch following the course of the head branch of the Saco river, which has its source in a pond of one or two acres, situated near the road. The scenery at this place is wonderfully grand and picturesque. The whole mountain, which otherwise forms a continued range, is here cloyen down quite to its base, opening a fine passage for the waters of the Saco. The gap is so narrow that space has been obtained with difficulty for the road. The crags and precipices on both sides rise with great steepness, forming a support for the irregular ridges above. For many miles below the commencement of the notch, the eye meets, on both sides, a succession of steep and precipitous mountains, rising to the height of several thousand feet, and utterly inaccessible from the valley below. The sides of these mountains, consist in some parts of bald rock, variegated by the trickling of water; in other parts, they are covered with trees and shrubs.

Nottingham, t. Eng. capital of Nottinghamshire, on the Trent; 14 NE. Derby, 125 N. by W. London. Lon. 1. 10. W. Lat. 52. 59. N. Pop. in 1779, 17,700; in 1811, 34,363. It stands on an eminence, and from its picturesque situation, and striking appearance of its buildings, is one of the pleasantest and most beautiful towns in England. The streets are generally narrow and irregular. The castle is a large, handsome, and conspicuous edifice. The town contains 4 chh., 15 dissenting houses of worship, other public buildings, and various charitable institutions.

Nottingham is famous for being the chief seat of the manufacture of stockings, of the finer kinds, as silk and cotton. The number of frames made use of is upwards of 10,000. Here are also manufactures of lace for veils, shawls, &c.; and formerly malt, leather, and earthen ware, which have now declined. It is favourably situated for trade, having a communication with the eastern and western seas by means of the Trent and Mersey, and also communicating with the Severn and Thames. It has an extensive trade with the surrounding country. It sends 2 members to parliament. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday; and 3 annual fairs.—Natives, Kippis, Wakefield, and Arkwright.

Nova Scotia, British province, N. A. consisting of a peninsula, connected by an isthmus with the province of New-Brunswick. Lat. 43. 30. to 46. N. The bay of Fundy separates it on the NW. from New Brunswick; on the NE. it is separated by narrow straits from the islands of St. John's and Cape Breton; on the S. & W. it is bounded by the Atlantic; about 250 miles long, from 30 to 60 broad; divided into 9 counties and 37 townships. Pop. estimated at 100,000; mostly Episcopalians, with a bishop at Halifax, the capital. The other towns are Liverpool, Lunenburg, Annapolis, Barrington, Pictou, Argyle, and Windsor, where there is a college. The exports consist of fish, plaster of Paris, and lumber. Those from Halifax, in 1810, amounted to 600,000*l.* sterling, and the imports into the whole, to 1,200,000*l.*

The winter is long and severe, continuing at least 7 months in the year; to this immediately succeeds, without the intervention of any thing that may be called spring, a summer, when the heat is as violent as the cold was in the winter months. The soil in most parts is barren, the corn it produces of a shrivelled kind, like rye, and intermixed with a cold spongy moss. It is not, indeed, uniformly bad, there being tracts in Nova Scotia, not inferior to the best land in New England. The country round Halifax has the appearance of cultivation, and a flourishing state.—Nova Scotia was first settled by the French and called by them Acadia. It was granted by James I. to Wm. Alexander, but not confirmed to England till 1713. It included New Brunswick till 1784; when it was divided into two provinces.

Nova Zembla, isl. in the Frozen ocean, separated from the continent of Russia, by the straits of Vaigatskoi; belonging to the Russian government of Archangel. It is about 540 miles in length, and from 100 to 250 in breadth. It is more properly two islands, as a strait or channel of the North sea, nearly in the centre, divides it into two parts, N. and S. This country was first discovered by the English, in the year 1553. It has since been visited by ships attempting to discover a NE. passage; and in the year 1596, a Dutch vessel being wrecked on the coast, the seamen passed the winter in this unhappy country, but were with great difficulty preserved alive. Since that some Russians have passed a winter there without suffering so much. The country is represented as desolate in the extreme, producing no trees, nor any other vegetable but moss and some few arctic plants. Some human beings have been seen there at times, but they are not supposed to be inhabitants, but Samoeids who have ventured across, either in canoes, or on the ice, for fish or game. The animals seen there are white bears, white foxes, elks, rein-deer, and rabbits; sea cows abound on the coasts, and sea fowl, to lay their eggs. Lon. 53. to 73. E. Lat. 70. 30. to 76. N.

Novgorod, or Novgorodskoi, government, Russia, bounded N. by Olonetz, NW. by Petersburg, SW. by Pskov, SE. by Tver, and E. by Vologda; its length about 320 miles, its mean breadth about 160. Lon. 29. 39. E. Lat. 57. 10. to 61. 10. N. Pop. 825,300. Sq. m. 55,000.

Novgorod, or Norogorod, city, Russia, capital of a government, on the river Volchova, at N. end of lake Ilmen; 92 SSE. Petersburg, 260 NW. Moscow. Lon. 31. 16. E. Lat. 58. 32. N. Pop. in 1783, 7,126. H. 1,540. Abp. see. It is one of the most ancient towns in Russia, and was formerly called Novgorod Veliki, or Grand Novgorod. In the ninth century it was taken by Ruric, great duke of Russia, who made it the capital of his dominions. At his death, the seat of government was removed to Kiev, and Novgorod continued for above a century under the jurisdiction of governors nominated by the great duke: afterwards, it was for a long time governed by its own dukes. It became the great mart of trade between Russia and the Hanseatic cities, and made the most rapid advances in opulence and population. At this period its dominions were so extensive, its power so great, and its situation so impregnable, as to give rise to a proverb, "Who can resist the gods, and great Novgorod?" It continued in this flourishing state until the middle of the 15th century, when the great dukes of Russia laid claim to its feudal sovereignty.

An idea of its populousness, when compared with its present declined state, is manifest from the fact, that in 1508, above 15,000 persons died of an epidemical disorder; more than double the number of its present inhabitants. In its most flourishing condition, it contained at least 400,000 souls.—Under the reign of Ivan Vassilievitch II., the prosperity of Novgorod experienced a most fatal downfall, from which it never recovered: that monarch having, in 1570, discovered a secret correspondence between some of the principal inhabitants and Sigismund Augustus, king of Poland, relative to a surrender of the city into his hands, inflicted the most exemplary and inhuman vengeance upon them. He repaired in person to Novgorod, and appointed a court of inquiry, justly denominated the tribunal of blood. Contemporary historians relate, that its proceedings continued during the space of 5 weeks; and that on each day of this fatal period, more than 500 inhabitants fell victims to the vengeance of incensed despotism. According to some authors, 25,000; according to others, more than 30,000 persons perished in this dreadful carnage.

The present town is surrounded by a rampart of earth, with a range of old towers at regular distances, forming a circumference of scarcely a mile and a half.—The cathedral of St. Sophia is probably one of the most ancient churches in Russia. Several princes of the ducal family of Russia are interred in this cathedral. It contains 62 chh. and 3 convents. These together with various ruins, attest its former magnificence, but the town now consists of scattered groups of miserable houses.

Novgorod, (Niznei), or Nishegorod, gov. Russia, bounded N. by Kostrom, E. by Kazan and Simbirsk, S. by Penza and Tambov, and W. by Vladimir. Pop. 1,100,000. Sq. m. 20,400. The face of the country is level, the soil, productive, and the climate temperate. Productions, corn, hemp, and cattle. Rivers, the Vetluga, Sura, Volga, and Oka.

Novgorod, (Niznei), t. Russia, and capital of a government, situated at the confluence of the Oka and Volga; 220 E. Moscow, 492 ESE. Petersburg. Lon. 48. 54. E. Lat. 56. 18. N. Pop. 10,000. H. 1,826. Abp. see. It was built in the year 1222, by the great duke Jurii, or George Wsewoloditsh, and as it was the ap-penage and place of residence of the petty Russian princes, many of them lie buried here. In this city are 2 cathedrals, 28 parish churches, (most of them built with stone,) and 5 convents, a seminary, and a high school. It has a castle, surrounded with stone walls. It is favourably situated at the junction of two navigable rivers, and has an extensive trade in Siberian wares, salt, corn, and all kinds of provisions. Since 1816, one of the greatest fairs in Europe has been held here, beginning in the end of June and continuing through July. In the great fire that broke out here, in 1715, some thousands of the inhabitants lost their lives.

Nubia, country, Africa, bounded N. by Egypt, E. by the Red sea, S. by Abyssinia, and W. by unknown countries. In the south is Sennaar, a large independent state, sometimes nominally attached to Nubia. With the exception of the immediate banks of the Nile, the country consists almost entirely of sandy and rocky deserts. It is inhabited by numberless tribes of independent Arabs, forming a multitude of petty kingdoms, each governed by its chief. It is divided into 2 parts, called Wady Kenous and Wady Nouba; the chief distinction being the entirely different languages spoken in each. The former extends from Syene to Wady Leboua; the latter reaches to the frontier of Dongola.

The Nile here seldom overflows its banks; but the country is watered by wheels constructed for the purpose of raising the water from the river. The principal article for food is dhourra. Barley, French beans, tobacco, lentils, and water melons are cultivated. The atmosphere is extremely dry, the summers very hot, but the climate healthy; the plague unknown. The Nubians are generally well made, strong, muscular, with fine features.—In the southern part is the Berber district, consisting of 4 villages, employed chiefly in carrying on the trade of Egypt and Arabia with the interior of Africa. The chief trade of this district, and of all Nubia, consists in slaves, imported from the interior of Africa, to the number of about 5,000 annually, few of them over 15 years of age. They are either conveyed northward to Egypt, or across the Red sea by Suakem and Jidda.

One of the most remarkable features of this region consists in the remarkable remains of antiquity, found chiefly on the west side of the Nile. Some of these rival the monuments of Thebes. The Egyptian edifices consist of masonry; those of Nubia are either under ground, or are dug out of the solid rock. The most magnificent is that of Ebsambul, in a state of complete preservation, rising immediately from the bank of the river, and sculptured out of the living rock. It has 6 colossal figures in front; and Mr. Burckhardt found buried in the sand, 200 yards distant, 4 of a magnitude truly gigantic. One of them from the dimensions of the shoulder, would not, if completely uncovered be less than 60 or 70 feet in height. They were conjectured to serve as ornaments to an immense temple, which might be discovered by clearing away the sand. The sculpture is very fine, but the hieroglyphics are indifferent.

Nun, r. Africa, which runs into the Atlantic. Lon. 5. 6. W. Lat. 4. 40. N.

Nun, or Vled de Nun, pr. Africa, S. of Sus, from which it is separated by sandy deserts. The emperor of Morocco arrogates to himself the sovereignty of this country, but his real authority is here extremely feeble. This vast but desert province affords not a single harbour or anchoring place along a coast of 180 miles, that is, quite to Cape Bojador. It is inhabited by different tribes of Arabs, whose camps are scattered over such parts of the interior country, as are capable of cultivation. The side next to the sea is a sandy shore, lined with rocks under water, over which the waves break violently. Several of these Arab tribes are more affable and honest than the other Moors. They trade to Mogador, and it is probable they have a more immediate communication with the factories of Senegal. Pop. stated by Jackson, at 200,000.

Nuremberg, or Nurnberg, city, Bav. in the circle of the Rezat, capital of a district, on the Pegnitz; 55 ESE. Wurzburg, 78 ESE. Mentz, 90 N. by W. Munich. Lon. 11. 4. E. Lat. 49. 25. N. Pop. 27,000. H. 4,500. It is an ancient city, in the middle ages the occasional residence of the emperors; formerly free and imperial, & twice as populous as at present; and has long ranked among the principal trading towns of Germany. The Pegnitz is not navigable, and the town owes its trade in a great measure to its central position. It is situated in a sandy, but well cultivated plain, surrounded by an old wall, upwards of 3 miles in circuit, having 8 gates. The streets are broad, but crooked and irregular; the houses generally of stone. It contains a castle, 5 public squares, 16 bridges, 190 streets, 8 Luth. chh., 1 Ref. and 1 Cath., a public library, a gymnasium, a royal institute, and other institutions.

Nuremberg has long been distinguished for its manufactures. It was noted for working in iron, brass, and other metals 4 centuries ago. It passes for having been the first place where watches and air guns were made. Among its manufactures are musical and mathematical instruments, watches, maps, copper plates, pins, needles, spectacles, and toys of all kinds, whether of hardware or wood. The printing & book-selling business is carried on to a considerable extent. It was anciently called Mons Noricorum, and the surrounding country Noricum. Natives, Pfinzing and Albert Durer.

Nyborg, or Nyeborg, s-p. Denmark; 16 W. Corsoer. Lon. 10. 48. E. Lat. 55. 22. N. Pop. 1,900. It is situated on the E. coast of the island of Funen, in a bay of the Great Belt, surrounded with a rampart and ditch. The harbour is large, but neither deep enough, nor sheltered from some winds. All that remains of the ancient royal palace, where Christian II. was born in 1481, is only a large wing with a flat tower, a little higher than the roof. It serves at present for a magazine and arsenal. This city was first built in 1175, and in the 13th and 14th centuries, most of the assemblies of the states and courts of judicature, particularly the remarkable diet in 1256, were held here. In 1659, the Swedes were totally defeated almost under the guns of its castle.

Odessa, s-p. Russia, in Cherson, on a small bay of the Black sea, between the mouths of the Dneiper and Dniester, about 6 miles from each; 45 W. Otchacov, 98 E. Cherson. Lon. 30. 38. E. Lat. 46. 28. N. Pop. in 1816, 35,500. H. 1,811. This place, which is rapidly advancing, is entirely of modern erection. It was formerly called Kodjabeg, and consisted of only a few houses, till 1792, when it was fixed upon by Catherine II. for a future mercantile emporium. It is possessed of considerable advantages, having a fine bay with sufficient depth of water almost to the very edge for the largest ships of war. The port is artificial, and adapted to the reception of about 300 vessels. It is surrounded by extensive plains, which when well cultivated, will be very productive. The streets are wide, straight, crossing each other at right angles; and the town is neatly built. It contains 7 chh., a synagogue, hospital, custom house, exchange, theatre, a lyceum or modern Greek seminary with 8 professors, schools of navigation, trade, &c.

Odessa was declared a free port in 1804 for 25 years, but in 1821 the Russian government declared it no longer such. The number of vessels that entered the port in 1816, was 846, nearly 1-2 Russian, and nearly 1-3 British. The great article of export from the Ukraine and the neighbouring provinces, is corn; other articles, but in small quantities, are tallow, hides, flax, and lumber. Brewing and distilling are carried on here on a large scale; and there are some manufactures of woollens, silk, gunpowder, and soap. The chief disadvantages of the place are the scarcity of wood and water, and at certain seasons, a degree of unhealthiness in the climate.—Many of the inhabitants are Greeks, who have 6 insurance offices, under their direction.

Ohio, i. e. in the Indian language Beautiful River, r. U. S., formed by the union of the Alleghany and Monongahela, at Pittsburg, Pa. It separates Virginia and Kentucky on the S.

from the states of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois on the N. and after a WSW. course of 949 miles, joins the Mississippi, 193 miles below the Missouri, in Lon. 88. 58. W. Lat. 37. N. From Pittsburg to its mouth, by a direct line, it is only 614 miles. The river varies in breadth from 400 to 1400 yards. At Cincinnati it is 534 yards, which may be regarded its mean breadth. It is an excellent river for inland navigation. Its current is very gentle, and nowhere broken by any considerable falls, except at Louisville. The whole descent here, in 2 miles, is 22 1-2 feet, but the current is not so broken but that boats have, in many instances, ascended the falls. A canal is contemplated around these falls.

The annual range from high to low water is upwards of 50 feet, and its extreme range about 60 feet. When lowest, it may be forded in several places above Louisville. It is frozen over almost every winter near Pittsburg, and has been frozen about 400 miles below Pittsburg. The navigation is generally suspended 8 or 10 weeks, during the winter, by floating ice. Its current when at mean height, is estimated at 3 miles an hour, when very low, 2 miles. The river contains 100 islands, but there are none between the states of Ohio and Kentucky. Steam boats are now employed on this river with great advantage. The principal towns on the Ohio, below Pittsburg, are Steubenville, Wheeling, Marietta, Gallipolis, Maysville, Cincinnati, Madison, and Louisville.

The length of the Ohio, from Pittsburg to the Mississippi, as measured, according to its meanders, by captain Hutchins, is 1188 miles. But according to the surveys made by the U.S. on the N. bank, is only 949 miles. The following table of distances is taken from Dr. Drake, and is founded chiefly on those surveys.

Towns. Columbus is the seat of government. Cincinnati is much the largest town. The other most considerable towns are Chillicothe, Steubenville, Zanesville, Marietta, Dayton, New Lancaster, New Lisbon, St. Clairsville, Urbana, Lebanon, Circleville, and Gallipolis.

Education. Charters have been granted for 3 institutions, styled universities, in this state, at Athens, Cincinnati, and Oxford. Academies have been established at Athens, Burton, Chillicothe, Dayton, Lebanon, Marietta, Putnam, Steubenville, Tallmadge, Worthington, and Xenia. In but few of these, however, are kept regular classical schools. Common schools are encouraged more or less throughout the state. One 36th part of every township was granted by the U. S. for the support of schools, and 3 townships for the support of the universities.

Religion. The number of ministers of the several denominations of Christians in Ohio, in 1817, was stated as follows; Presbyterians 48; Methodists 34; Baptists 13; New Lights of the Christian church 9; Seceders 6; Episcopalians 3; Congregationalists 3. The number of meetings of Friends in this state and Indiana, was stated at 59.

Government. The legislature is composed of a senate and house of representatives. The latter, who must not exceed 72 nor be less than 36 in number, are elected annually. The senators, who must equal one third, but not exceed one half of the number of representatives, are chosen biennially. The governor is elected biennially by the people. The annual elections are held on the 2d Tuesday in October.

Rivers. The rivers which flow into Lake Erie on the north, are the Maumee, Sandusky, Huron, Vermillion, Black, Cuyahoga, Grand, and Ashtabula; those in the south flowing into the Ohio, are the Muskingum, Hockhocking, Scioto, Little and Great Miami. The Au-Glaize and St. Mary's in the western part of the state, are branches of the Maumee. It has been contemplated to connect lake Erie with the Ohio, by means of a canal from the Cuyahoga to the Tuscarawas, a head branch of the Muskingum; also by uniting a branch of the Maumee with the waters of the Great Miami.

Face of the country and soil. The interior and northern parts of the country, bordering on Lake Erie, are generally level, and in some places marshy. Nearly one third of the eastern and south eastern part is very hilly and broken. The hills are exceedingly numerous, but they seldom rise into considerable mountains. Immediately upon the banks of the Ohio, and several of its tributaries, are numerous tracts of interval or meadow land, of great fertility. In the interior, on both sides of the Scioto, and on the Great and Little Miami, are perhaps the most extensive bodies of level and rich land in the state. In many parts there are large prairies, particularly on the head waters of the Muskingum and Scioto, and between the Scioto and the two Miamies. Some of these prairies are low and marshy, producing large quantities of coarse grass, from 2 to 5 feet high; some of which is of a tolerably good quality; other prairies are elevated, and are frequently called barrens; not always on account of their sterility, for they are often fertile. The most elevated tracts of country between the rivers, are the wettest & most marshy in the state; and the driest land is that which borders on the various streams of water. Among the forest trees, are oak of various species, maple, hickory, beach, birch, poplar, sycamore, ash, pawpaw, buckeye, cherry, &c.

Productions. Wheat is the staple production. Other sorts of grain, various kinds of fruit, grass, hemp, and flax, are extensively cultivated. From 70 to 100 bushels of Indian corn, have, in many instances, been produced in a year from one acre. Coal is found in great quantities in the eastern parts. Iron ore has been discovered and wrought pretty extensively in several places, particularly on the south of Licking river, 4 miles west of Zanesville, on Brush Creek, and in some other places. Salt springs are found on some of the eastern waters of Muskingum, and on Salt Creek 28 m. SE. of Chillicothe, where there are considerable salt works.

Climate. It has been a common opinion that the climate of Ohio is considerably warmer than that of countries in the same parallels on the Atlantic, but from observations made at Cincinnati, the difference must be much less than has been supposed. The summers are warm and pretty regular, though somewhat subject to tornadoes. Spring and autumn are very pleasant; and the winters generally mild. In some parts near the marshes and stagnant waters, the inhabitants are subject to the fever and ague; but the climate, generally, is accounted remarkably healthy.

Indians. The several Indian tribes are the Wyandots, Shawanese, Senecas, Delawares, Mohawks, and Ottowas. Total number in Ohio, in 1819, 2,407.

Oonalashka, or Unalashka, isl. in the North Pacific ocean, separated from the continent of N. A. by a channel in the direction of NW. by N. Lon. 191. 20. to 192. E. Lat. 53. 45. to 54. N. Pop. about 1,000. It is the largest of the islands called Aleutian or Fox Islands; no large trees are seen, but underwood, shrubs, and plants, similar to those of Kamtschatka. The winter is much milder than in the E. parts of Siberia, and continues only from November to the end of March. The snow seldom lies upon the ground for any considerable time. Rein-deer, bears, wolves, ice-foxes, are not to be found on these islands; but they abound in black, grey, brown, and red foxes. The number of sea animals, such as sea-lions, sea-bears, and sea-otters, which resort to these shores, is very considerable. Upon some of the islands, warm springs and native sulphur are to be found.

The Fox Islands are in general very populous; Oonalashka, which is the largest island, is supposed to contain several thousand inhabitants. The houses of these Islanders are huts, built precisely in the manner of those in Kamtschatka, with the entry in a hole in the middle of the roof. In one of these huts live several families, to the amount of 30 or 40 persons. Six or seven of these huts, or yourts, make a village, of which there are 16 in Oonalashka.

Oparo, isl. in the Pacific ocean, discovered by Captain Vancouver in December 1791. Its greatest extent, which is in a N. 18. W., and S. 18 E. direction, is about 6 1-2 miles, and it may be about 18 in circuit. Its principal character is a cluster of high craggy mountains, forming in several places, most romantic pinnacles, with perpendicular cliffs, nearly from their summits to the sea; the vacancies between the mountains would more properly be termed chasms than valleys, in which there was no appearance of plenty, fertility, or cultivation; they were chiefly clothed with shrubs, and dwarf trees. The number of inhabitants on the island is estimated at 1,500. In this respect it must be considered prolific, notwithstanding its uncultivated appearance. The natives, however, appear to be exceedingly well fed, of middling stature, extremely well made, and in general their countenances were open, cheerful, and strongly marked with indications of hospitality. Oporto, or O Porto, city, & s-p. Portugal, in Entre-Duero-e-Minho, on N. bank of the Duero, 2 miles from its mouth ; 49 N. Coimbra, 150 N. by E. Lisbon. Lon. 8. 39. W. Lat. 41. 11. N. Pop. in 1789, 63,505. H. 15,138. Pop. in 1820, about 70,000. Bp. see. It stands partly on a hill and partly on the bank of the river ; and is surrounded by an old wall, in many places fallen to ruin. The roadstead is spacious, but the harbour is extremely difficult of entrance. The town is in general well built : the buildings are regular, light, and neat ; and it is accounted the cleanest and most agreeable town in Portugal, and in population & trade yields only to Lisbon. Several of the streets are broad, handsome, and well paved ; others are narrow, crooked, and dirty. It contains a cathedral, 9 parish chh., 80 other churches and chapels, 17 convents, and 13 hospitals.

On the opposite side of the river are two places, Gaya and Cale, by some accounted distinct towns, but properly suburbs of Oporto. Cale was the original town, mentioned by ancient writers. The situation of the present town being found more convenient for navigation, in a subsequent age, was built upon, and called Portus Cale, and at length becoming the more considerable of the two, took the name of O Porto, i. e. the Port ; and the kingdom from Portus Cale, took the name of Portugal.

Oporto, situated at the mouth of a great river, has long been the mercantile emporium for the north of Portugal, and particularly for the export of the wine called port. This wine, though deriving its name from Oporto, is produced at considerable distance, in the province of Tras los Montes, and in some districts of Entre-Duero-e-Minho. The amount annually exported varies from 50,000, to 60,000, and 70,000 pipes ; of which the greater part goes to the British dominions. The lesser exports are oil, sumach, linen, and oranges.—The climate is moist in winter, but seldom so cold as to freeze. The heat in summer would be intense were it not moderated by regular winds. The soil around the town is not fertile, but the gardens in the environs are beautiful.

Oran, or Warran, (an. Portus Divini,) t. Algiers, in Tremecen or Tlemsan; 170 SW. Algiers. Lon. 0. 28. W. Lat. 35. 50. N. Pop. estimated from 12,000 to 20,000. It is built on the declivity, and near the foot of a high mountain which overlooks it from the N. and NW.; and upon the ridge of this mountain there are two castles that command the city on the one side, and the Mers' al Kebeer on the other. To the S. and SE. there are 2 other castles, erected upon the same level with the lower part of the city, but are separated from it by a deep-winding valley, which serves it as a natural trench on S. side; where, likewise, at a little distance, there is a very plentiful spring of excellent water. The rivulet formed by this fountain conforms its course to the several windings of the valley; and passing afterwards under the walls of the city, liberally supplies it with water.

In the year 1509, it was taken by the Spaniards, and remained in their possession till 1708. Oran is a place of great strength, as well by nature as art. The Spaniards, when they were first masters of the place, built several beautiful churches, and other edifices, in the manner and style of the Roman architecture, though of less strength and solidity. In the year 1790, this place was almost destroyed by an earthquake, little besides the outer walls remaining. The number of persons who perished was estimated at upwards of 2,000, including 22 officers, and 304 private soldiers belonging to the garrison.

The streets are narrow, dark, dirty, and ill paved, and the houses mean. It contains 1 Reformed and 9 Cath. chh., a hospital, and has manufactures of linen, serge, and paper. Before the revolution it was the capital of a principality of the same name. It once had a university, founded, in the year 1365, by the emperor Charles V. Some councils were held here in the years 441, 529, and 1228. Among other remains of Roman antiquities to be seen in this place, a fine triumphal arch, and an amphitheatre, are both very remarkable. The principality extended about 10 miles in length, and 7 in breadth. The annual revenue was about 50,000 livres. It contained one city, 2 small towns, and about 9 villages, and was exempt from all the usual taxes in France.

given rise to a proverb, which says, whether it rains or not, there is always corn in Orihuela. Here was formerly a university, founded in the year 1555. At Orihuela they make those curious snuff-boxes with the roots of the terebinthus, called in Spanish cornicabra, which are so much admired on account of their beautiful shades, representing landscape, &c. They are chiefly used for Spanish snuff, as they preserve it moist and cool; and for this purpose are in very great estimation at Rome.

Orinoco, or Oronoko, r. S. A. one of the largest in the world. Its source has not been ascertained with certainty, but according to La Cruz, it rises from the small lake Ipava, in Lat. 5. 5. N. It has a very circuitous course of upwards (including its windings) of 1,500 miles, and flows into the Atlantic opposite to the island of Trinidad by about 50 mouths, 7 of which are navigable. The principal mouth, 6 leagues wide, is SE. of Trinidad, in Lon. 59. 50. W. Lat. 8. 30. N. The Orinoco is connected with the Amazon by the Rio Negro and Cassiquiari, and receives the waters of many large rivers, among which are the Meta, Apure, Arauua, Caura, and Caroni. At the distance of 200 leagues from the ocean, it is from 2,500 to 3,000 fathoms wide; and at St. Thomas, 3,850 fathoms; and in March, when the waters are lowest, 65 fathoms deep. During the rainy season it inundates the immense plains through which it flows: the inundation extending, during the highest floods, from 80 to 90 miles on each side, presenting to the eye a boundless expanse of waters.

On the banks of the Orinoco the magnificence of the scenery is beyond description. Forests of the greatest extent are filled with aromatic trees, which diffuse the most delightful odour; birds of every singular variety of beautiful plumage, are every where observed, and hordes of monkeys follow the astonished traveller. Passing these forests, enormous plains extend their verdant surfaces further than the eye can reach, and the cataracts of the Orinoco give their name to the whole Cordillera, and are represented the most tremendous that have ever been observed; but no good description of these falls has yet been given, though they constitute the only outlets from the country situated to the E. of the Andes, to the vast plains of the Amazon.

Orissa, pr. Hind. bounded N. by Bengal, E. by the bay of Bengal, S. by the Godavery, and W. by Goondwanah; 530 miles long from NE. to SW.; average breadth about 90. Lat. 16 to 23, N. The principal divisions are Cattack, Cicacole, Rajamundry, Mohurbunge, Midnapour, and Konjeur. The chief rivers are the Godavery, Mahanuddy, Byturnee, and Subunreeka. Pop. estimated at 4,500,000. It is generally a barren country, yet the south-east part equals in fertility most parts of India. Three fourths of this country, comprising all the most valuable parts, are possessed by the British; the remainder by various petty chiefs, who are in a state of constant hostility with each other, and pay a trifling or nominal tribute to the Nizam, Mahrattas, or British. The mountainous districts to the west, are inhabited by a savage race of Hindoos, still called Aureas.

Orkney Islands, (an. Orcades,) a cluster of islands in the North sea, separated from the N. coast of Scotland by the Pentland frith, which is generally about 10 or 11 miles wide. They are about 30 in number, but several of them called holms, are uninhabited, producing only sheep pasture. The principal islands are Pomona, or Mainland, Hoy, North Ronaldshay, South Ronaldshay, Sanday, Stronsay, Eday, Westray, &c. Lon. 2. 13. to 3. 15. W. Lat. 58. 37. to 59. 16. N. They constitute a county of Scotland, and are divided into 18 parochial districts. Pop. in 1811, 23,238. Acres about 384,000; 24,000 acres arable, 84,000 productive land, 294,000 heath and moss. The surface presents a great variety; the east and north coasts generally low; the western coasts elevated, and terminating in bold cliffs, exhibiting a highly picturesque scenery. The soil is mostly unproductive, and agriculture is backward. The climate is variable and disagreeable: the air is cold and moist; the winter rainy, with little frost and snow. Thunder & lightning are most common in winter. The range of the thermometer from the cold of winter to the heat of summer, is from 25° to 75°. The inhabitants may be divided into 3 classes; 1st, gentry, or proprietors of the land; 2d, tradesmen or shopkeepers; 3d, farmers, servants, and cottagers, about 8 10ths of the population, ignorant, poor, indolent, and superstitious. Chief town, Kirkwall.

Orleannois, before the revolution, a fertile province of France, bounded E. by Gâtinois, S. by Sologne, W. by Dunois and Vendômois, and N. by Beauce. The principal river, the Loire, passes through and divides it in two. Orleans, which gave name to the province, was the capital. The forest of Orleans, in this province, contains 94,000 acres. It is now divided, with the Blaisois and Chartrain, into the three departments of Loir-and-Cher, Loiret, and Eure-and-Loir.

Orleans, (an. Aurelia, & Genebun,) city, France, capital of Loiret, on the Loire; 14 1-2 posts SSW. Paris. Lon. 1. 55. E. Lat. 47. 54. N. Pop. 41,937. H. 4,500. Bp. see. It contains a cathedral, which is one of the finest Gothic edifices in France, 25 chh., 5 hospitals, a royal college, an academy, and a public library of 36,000 volumes. It is situated in a pleasant, fertile, and well cultivated country, and has considerable trade. The chief articles of export are corn, wine, brandy, and fruit. The manufactures are stockings, woollens, hats, leather, and sugar. The streets are straight, narrow, and incommodious; and the houses, though not badly built, are in an antiquated style. Before the revolution, it was the capital of the Orleannois.

Ormus, (an. Tyros,) isl. Asia, at the entrance of the gulf of Persia, in the part of it called the gulf of Ormuz, about 10 miles in circ. Lon. 56. 40. E. Lat. 27. 8. N. On this island there was formerly one of the most splendid and celebrated cities in Asia, the emporium of the trade of Persia and India. It derived its greatness wholly from commerce. In 1514 it was taken by the Portuguese under Albuquerque, and continued one of the main seats of the Portuguese power till the reign of Shah Abbas, when it came into the possession of Persia, and the trade was transferred to Gombroon, about 20 miles distant on the opposite coast. About the end of the last century it was taken possession by the imam of Mascat, but it was no longer a mart and city, having only about 20 families. It was visited in 1820, and the ancient city found to be a mass of ruins, the reservoirs for water being the only buildings in a perfect state. The island is a mere rock of salt, producing neither a single article of provision, nor a drop of water.

Osacca, s-p. Japan, in Nippon, the port of Meaco; 25 SW. Meaco. Lat. 35.8. N. It is next to the two capitals Meaco and Jedo, the most considerable for riches, grandeur, and population. It is situated in a large bay, to which it gives name, near the mouth of the river Jedogawa, which is here as large as the Thames at London. The port is defended by a strong castle on NE. end, which was built by the emperor Faycho, so as to command both the city and river. It has always a numerous garrison, and is commanded by two officers in greatest favour with the court; one of them has the care of the castle, in which are kept part of the emperor's treasures and stores; and the other presides over the garrison; but neither of them have any thing to do with the government of the city, which has its own governors and officers in the same form as that of Jedo, and is kept under the same strict regulations as the other chief cities of the empire.

Osacca abounds with all sorts of provisions and merchandise. The neighbouring country affords a sort of earth of a beautiful orange colour, with which they cover their houses, and great quantities of it are conveyed into the ports of the empire for the same purpose.

Ostend, or Ostende, s-p. Neth. in West Flanders ; 14 W. Bruges, 35 W. by N. Ghent, 66 W. Brussels. Lon. 2. 55. E. Lat. 51. 14. N. Pop. 10,534. The old fortifications, a great earthen mound, and a moat around the town are still kept up ; and the approach is rendered very difficult by inundating a part of the surrounding country, which is low and perfectly level. The streets are straight, and the houses generally well built, but low. Its greatest commercial prosperity was from 1780 to 1794. Since 1814 its commerce has in a degree revived. The exports are wheat, clover-seed, flax, tallow, and hides.—In 1601 it was besieged by the archduke Albert, and on the 20th September, 1604, the capitulation, in which the garrison and the inhabitants obtained the most honourable terms, was signed above 3 years after the town had been first invested, and it had cost the lives of 100,000 soldiers. Some accounts say, that the loss of the Spaniards, amounted to 80,000, and that of the besieged to 50,000.

Otabalo, jurisdiction, Quito. The lands are laid out in plantations, and produce great quantities of sugar. Here are also very considerable manufactures carried on by Indians residing in its villages, who seem to have an innate inclination to weaving; for besides the stuffs made at the common manufactures, such Indians as are independent make on their own account a variety of goods, as cotton, carpets, pavillions for beds, quilts in damask work wholly of cotton, either white, blue, or variegated with different colours; all which are highly valued, both in the province of Quito and Peru, where they are disposed of to great advantage. This jurisdiction abounds with horses and black cattle; and from the milk of the latter large quantities of cheese are made. The country is happily situated for pasture, having a great number of rivulets, whose waters render the plains remarkably fertile. It has also large flocks of sheep, though these seem to be neglected by the inhabitants.

Otabalo, t. Quito, capital of the above jurisdiction; 30 N. by E. Quito. Lon. 77. 56. W. Lat. 0. 15. N. Pop. stated from 15, to 20,000. The inhabitants manufacture considerable quantities of cotton stuffs.

Otaha, one of the Society islands, in the S. Pacific ocean, situated N. of Ulietea, and surrounded with a reef of rocks, with a good harbour on the E. coast, called Obamene, and another on the W. called Oberura. It was conquered by the king of Bolabola. Lon. 151. 20. W. Lat. 16. 53. S.

Otaheite, or Tahcila, or King George the Third's Island, an island in the S. Pacific ocean, about 100 miles in circumference, supposed to have been first seen by Quiros in the year 1606, and by him called Sagittaria. It is upwards of 30 miles long, and 20, where widest, broad. It is formed of two peninsulas, one four times the extent of the other, connected by a low marshy isthmus about 2 miles broad. The island is mountainous, except a narrow border of low land which nearly surrounds it. Capt. Wallis was the first Englishman who discovered it in the year 1767. The year following it was visited by Monsieur Bougainville, a French commander; and again by Captain Cook in the years 1769, 1773, and 1774, from whom, as was drawn up by Dr. Hawkesworth, the following account is taken: "The island is surrounded by a reef of coral rock, which forms several excellent bays and harbours, where there is room and depth of water for any number of the largest ships. The face of the country, except that part of it which borders upon the sea, is very uneven; it rises in ridges that run up into the middle of the island, and there form mountains, which may be seen at the distance of 60 miles; between the foot of these ridges and the sea is a border of low land, surrounding the whole island, except in a few places where the ridges rise directly from the sea: the border of low land is in different parts of different breadths, but no where more than a mile and a half.

"The soil, except on the very tops of the ridges, is extremely rich and fertile, watered by a great number of rivulets of excellent water, and covered with fruit trees of various kinds. The produce is bread-fruit, cocoa-nuts, bananas of 13 sorts; plantains, a fruit not unlike an apple, which, when ripe, is very pleasant; sweet potatoes, yams, cocoas, a kind of arum; a fruit known here by the name of jambu, and reckoned most delicious; sugar-cane, which the inhabitants eat raw; a root of the salop kind, which the inhabitants call pea; a plant called ethee, &c. All these, which serve the inhabitants for food, the earth produces spontaneously, or with little culture. They had no European fruit, garden-stuff, pulse, or legumes, nor grain of any kind. Of tame animals, they have only hogs, dogs, and poultry; neither is there a wild animal in the island, except ducks, pigeons, parroquets, with a few other birds, and rats, there being no other quadruped, nor any serpent. But the sea supplies them with a great variety of most excellent fish to eat, which is their chief luxury, and to catch fish is their principal labour.

"As to the people, they are of the largest size of Europeans. The men are tall, strong, well limbed, and finely shaped. The women of the superior rank are also, in general, above our middle stature, but those of the inferior class are below it, and some of them are very small. Their natural complexion is that kind of clear olive or brunette, which many people in Europe prefer to the finest white and red. The hair is almost universally black, and rather coarse. In the motions of the men there is at once vigour and ease; their walk is graceful, their deportment liberal, and their behaviour to strangers and to each other, affable and courteous. In their dispositions, also, they seemed to be brave, open, and candid, without either suspicion or treachery, cruelty or revenge. They were, however, all thieves."

The population has been very differently estimated. Capt. Cook, in 1774, estimated it at upwards of 200,000; Zupaya, in 1769, at 30,000; Capt. Wilson, in 1797, at 16,000; and Jefferson and Scott, missionaries, in 1802, at 7,000.

In 1797, 13 missionaries from England were settled upon this island. During 15 years they laboured with very little success. In 1814 the number of those who, in Otaheite, had voluntarily renounced idolatry and embraced Christianity, amounted to about 50. Since that time the efforts of the missionaries have been attended with great success, almost the whole of the inhabitants of this and 6 or 8 neighbouring islands, having renounced idolatry and embraced Christianity. A general reformation of manners has followed; schools have been established, and the useful arts introduced. In 1818, there were in Otaheite, Eimeo, &c. 66 places of public worship and 17 missionaries. Lon. 149. 15. to 150. W. Lat. 17. 30. to 17. 48. S.

Olakootai, or Wenooaetta, small isl. in the S. Pacific ocean, about 3 miles in circumference. Lon. 201. 37. E. Lat. 19. 51. S. The beach, within the reef, is composed of a white coral sand; the land within does not rise above 6 or 7 feet, and is covered with a light reddish soil; but it is entirely destitute of water.

Otchakov, t. Russia, in Ekaterinoslav, at the mouth of the Dnieper, on the Black sea; 40 W. Cherson, 180 E. Jassy. Lon. 31. 26. E. Lat. 46. 37. N. H. 80. This town was of considerable importance to the Turks, and afforded a harbour for their gallies against Corsairs; and enabled them occasionally to act against the Russians, for which reason it was always furnished with a numerous garrison, and was strongly fortified. It was founded by a colony of Milesians, who gave it the name of Olbis.—Otchakov was some years since a place of considerable trade; but since the establishment of Odessa, it has declined to a small place, visited annually by only about 90 vessels. The road and harbour are very insecure.

Oude, pr. Hind., bounded N. by Nepaul, E. by Bahar, S. by Allahabad, and W. by Delhi and Agra: between Lat. 26. and 28. N.; 250 miles long, and 100 broad. The chief towns are Lucknow, Fyzabad, Oude, Khyrabad, Goo-rackpour, and Bahreich. It is watered by the Ganges, Gogra, and Goomty. The surface is flat, well watered, and very fertile, producing, when well cultivated, good crops of wheat, barley, rice, sugar cane, cotton, indigo, and poppies. It is famous for its grapes, mangoes, and other fruits. The climate is better than that of Bengal. The inhabitants are about one third Mahometans, the rest Hindoos. Oude, properly called Ayodhya, is much celebrated in the ancient historical poems, as the kingdom of the famous demi-god Rama, who is said to have extended his empire over all the south of India. In 1801, a large part of this country was ceded to the British; the parts ceded yield a revenue of 13,523,474 rupees. In consequence of this cession the British engaged to defend the nabob's remaining territories from all foreign and domestic enemies.

The latter say, that this place is called in scripture Ourcadin, that is, fire of Chaldea, out of which, they say, God brought Abraham. The Greeks called it Edessa, and in honour of Antiochus, it was called Antiochia. The famous fountain Callirrhoe, being here, distinguished this city from others, by the name of Antiochia all Callirrhoen.

Ourfa is built on part of two hills, and in the valley between them, at the SW. corner of a fine plain, which appears more beautiful, because all the other parts about it are rocky, or mountainous; the town is about three miles in circumference, encompassed with ancient walls, defended by square towers. On the north side there is a very deep fosse, which seems to be the bed of a winter torrent coming from the west. Some parts of the town are tolerably well built, though it is not well laid out. The great beauty of it consists in some fine springs, that rise very plentifully between two hills; and at the very walls of the city. The castle is situated on S. side of the city, at the beginning of a chain of hills, which run southward. The ascent is very steep, and there is a deep fosse cut into the rock on three sides of it: the castle is about half a mile in circ., but there is nothing remarkable in it, except two very lofty Corinthian pillars with their bases, the capitals of which are fine; the columns consist of 26 stones, each about one foot 6 inches thick; they are probably the remains of a portico belonging to some large temple. There is a tradition, that the throne of Nimrod stood on these pillars; it is certain, that Timur Bec erected some trophies on them.

There is a great trade in this place, as it is the only town in all these parts for a considerable distance, and as it is the great thoroughfare into Persia. They prepare Turkey leather here, especially the yellow sort, for which they were formerly famous. There are a considerable number of Armenian Christians in the city, who have two churches. The country round is fertile in corn and fruit.

Owhyee, isl. in the N. Pacific ocean, the most easterly and by much the largest of the Sandwich islands, and thus described by Captain King: "It is of a triangular shape. The angular points make the NE. and S. extremities, of which the northern is in Lat. 20. 17. N. Lon. 204. 2. E.; the eastern in Lat. 18. 54. N. Lon. 205. 6. E.; and the southern extremity in Lat. 18. 54. N. Lon. 204. 15. E. Its greatest length, which lies in a direction nearly N. and S., is 85 miles; its breadth is 72 miles; and it is about 255 geographical, or 293 English miles in circ. Sq. m. about 4,000. The whole island is divided into 6 large districts; Amakooa and Ahedoo, which lie on the NE. side; Apooa and Kaoo, on the SE.; Akona and Koaarta, on the W. The districts of Amakooa and Ahedoo are separated by a mountain called Mouna Kaah, or The Mountain Kaah, which rises in three peaks, perpetually covered with snow: it is very steep and may be clearly seen at 120 miles distance. On doubling the east point of the island, we came in sight of another snowy mountain, called Mouna Roa, or The extensive Mountain, which continued to be a very conspicuous object all the while we were sailing along the SE. side. It is flat at the top, making what is called by mariners table land; the summit was constantly buried in snow, and we once saw its sides also slightly covered for a considerable way down, but the greatest part of this disappeared in a few days. According to the tropical line of snow, as determined by Mr. Condamine, from observations taken on the Cordilleras, this mountain must be at least 16,020 feet high. The peaks of Mouna Kaah appeared to be about half a mile high, and as they are entirely covered with snow, the altitude of their summits cannot be less than 18,400 feet. But it is probable that both these mountains may be considerably higher. For, in insular situations, the effects of the warm sea air must necessarily remove the line of snow, in equal latitudes, to a greater height than where the atmosphere is chilled on all sides by an immense tract of perpetual snow. The coast of Kaoo presents a prospect of the most horrid and dreary kind: the whole country appearing to have undergone a total change, from the effects of some dreadful convulsion. The ground is every where covered with cinders."

A considerable part of the island is very fertile, well cultivated, and populous. The number of inhabitants has been estimated at about 150,000. Bread fruit trees flourish here with great luxuriance. Cocoa-nut trees are abundant, sweet potatoes, the tarrow, or eddy-root, the cloth plant, and other plants are cultivated. On the 25th Feb. 1794, Tamaamaah, king of Owhyee, in council with the principal chiefs, assembled on board the British sloop Discovery, and in presence of George Vancouver, the commander, ceded the island to his Britannic majesty, and acknowledged themselves British subjects.—It was on this island that the celebrated captain Cook fell a sacrifice to a misunderstanding, or sudden impulse of revenge in the natives, on Sunday the 14th of February 1779.

Oxford, city, Eng. capital of the county to which it gives name; 45 SE. Worcester, 58 W. by N. London, 74 SW. Cambridge. Lon. 116. W. Lat. 51. 45. N. Pop. including the university, 12,931. Bp. see, and seat of a university. It is delightfully situated on a gentle eminence, in a valley at the confluence of the Cherwell with the Thames. Along these rivers, and between them and the city, lies a tract of beautiful and luxuriant meadows. For the beauty and magnificence of its buildings, Oxford is equalled by few cities in the world. From the neighbouring heights it presents a grand and imposing spectacle, from the number and variety of its spires, towers, domes, and other public edifices, while these structures, by their magnitude and splendid architecture, give it on a nearer approach, an air of the most striking magnificence. The High-street is one of the most beautiful in the world. The houses inhabited by traders are indifferent. The city contains a cathedral, 13 elegant parish churches, houses of worship for Catholics, Quakers, Methodists, and Baptists; a town and county hall, a jail, a bridewell, an infirmary, market buildings, and charity schools. Four members are sent to parliament, 2 for the city, and 2 for the university. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday. Oxford has no staple manufacture or branch of trade, but derives its chief support from the university. It is an ancient town, was the residence of Alfred, and has often been the seat of the English kings and parliaments.

The university of Oxford, from the extent and number of its buildings and institutions, and the wealth of its endowments, is by far the greatest in the world. Its origin is involved in obscurity: some suppose that it was founded, and some that it was revived by Alfred; others fix its origin considerably later. It consists of 20 colleges and 5 halls, each of which forms an establishment within itself, having its own students and teachers, revenues and regulations, yet are all united under the government of one university. The officers by whom the university is immediately governed, are the chancellor, high steward, vice-chancellor, and 2 proctors. In addition to the private officers in each college and hall, who see that due order and discipline are preserved, and all the liberal sciences taught, there are 23 public professors of the several arts and sciences. In 1820 the members of convocation was 1,873; members on the books 4,102; about one 3d of these are maintained by the revenues of the university; the rest live at their own expense. The students wear a peculiar dress.

The buildings of the university are very magnificent, and excel those of Cambridge; yet the chapel of King's college at Cambridge is thought to surpass any single edifice at Oxford. The other edifices belonging to the university, besides the colleges and halls, are the public schools, the Bodleian library, the picture gallery, the theatre capable of containing 4,000 persons, the Clarendon printing house, the Radcliffe library, the Ashmolean museum, the astronomical observatory, and the botanic garden. The Bodleian library is one of the largest and most valuable in Europe. There are 4 terms in the year at the 2 English universities. To obtain the degree of bachelor of arts a residence of 3 years, or 12 terms is necessary at Cambridge; 4 years or 16 terms at Oxford, except in case of sons of peers, and the eldest sons of baronets and knights, who may stand candidates after 3 years. For the degree of master of arts 3 more years are required. A person of 2 years standing may be admitted a student of the civil law; after being 5 years a student, he may receive the degree of bachelor of civil law; and in 4 years more the degree of doctor. The degree of bachelor of divinity is conferred on masters of arts of 4 years standing, and the degree of doctor 4 years after.—Some of the eminent men educated at Oxford are Wickliffe, Wolsey, More, Raleigh, Chillingworth, Hampden, Harvey, Clarendon, Hale, Locke, Addison, Steele, Blackstone, Lowth, Johnson, Adam Smith, Jones, Gibbon, and Fox.

The colleges, and halls, with the date of their foundation, and number of fellowships and scholarships, are exhibited in the following table.

Oxfordshire, co. England, bounded NW. by Warwickshire, NE. by Northamptonshire, E. by Buckinghamshire and Berkshire, S. and SW. by Berkshire, and W. by Gloucestershire and Worcestershire. The form is very irregular: from NW. to SE. it measures above 50 miles in length; but in breadth it varies much, being in the centre, near Oxford, barely 7, towards the S. about 12, and towards the N. near 40. It is divided into 14 hundreds, which contain one city, (Oxford,) 12 towns, 207 parishes, and 450,000 acres, of which 309,000 are to the N. and 141,000 to the S. of Oxford. The aspect of the country is agreeably diversified; the country is well watered, and it is an excellent agricultural county. Nine members are returned to parliament, viz. 2 for the county, 4 for Oxford city and university, 2 for Woodstock, and one for Banbury. Pop. 119,191. H. 23,217.

Pachuco, t. Mexico; 45 NNE. Mexico. Lon. 100. 42. W. Lat. 20. 45. N. It is famous for silver mines: Gemelli says, that in the space of 6 leagues there are not less than 1,000. One of them, called Trinity, is supposed to be nearly as rich as any in Mexico; there having been taken from it in ten years' time only, above 40 millions of silver. It is 8,141 feet above the level of the sea.

Pacific Ocean, name given to that sea which lies between Asia and America, and by navigators divided into North and South. This name was given it by the Spaniards, when first they sailed upon it, but with little justice, as tempestuous weather is as frequent as in the European seas. It was also called the South Sea, from the situation it appeared in on its first discovery. It is upwards of 10,000 miles in breadth.

Paderborn, or Paderburn, city, Pru. Westphalia, in Minden, capital of a circle, formerly capital of a bishopric of the same name; 14 E. Lippstatt, 40 S. Minden. Lon. 8. 44. E. Lat. 51. 44. N. Pop. 5,302. H. 872. It has a castle, a cathedral, 3 Cath. chh., 1 Luth. ch., 1 synagogue, a gymnasium, and a theological seminary. Here was a Cath. university founded in 1592, composed of two faculties, philosophy and theology, with 12 professors; but it was suppressed in 1818. In the Saxon war, Charlemagne, chose this as a place of abode, fixed his camp here, and erected it into a bishop's see. It enjoyed imperial privileges, carried on a great trade, and was reckoned one of the Hanse towns. It is at present much declined, and its trade insignificant.—The late bishopric of Paderborn contained about 120,000 inh. and about 1,000 sq. m. It is now included in the government of Minden.

It has a convenient harbour, capable of receiving vessels of 500 tons at high water. Vessels trade regularly from London and Bristol, and considerable quantities of slate are exported. A monastery was erected here in the fifth century. Market on Saturday.

Padua, delegation, Aust. Italy, in the government of Venice, surrounded by the delegations of Vicenza, Treviso, Venice, Rovigo, and Verona. Pop. 269,759. Sq. m. 848. Chief town, Padua. The surface is level, and the soil of the greatest fertility, producing corn, wine, fruit, silk, &c. The pastures are rich, and well stocked with cattle.

Padua, (an. Patavium,) city, Austrian Italy, capital of a delegation of the same name in the government of Venice, near the junction of the Bacchiglione and Brenta; 22 W. Venice, 50 ENE. Mantua. Lon. 11. 53. E. Lat. 45. 24. N. Pop. 31,176. H. 7,000. Bp. see. It contains a cathedral, 26 parish chh., 45 convents, 16 hospitals, a university, and numerous other public buildings. It is situated in a rich and beautiful country; is surrounded by a mound and ditch, in the form of a triangle; 7 miles in circuit, but containing much vacant space. The streets are narrow, dark, dirty, and ill paved; bordered on each side with arcades, which, though they afford a pleasant shade in hot weather, give the town a dull and gloomy appearance. The houses are, however, lofty and well built, and several of the public edifices are of magnificent architecture. Padua is a very ancient city, and though it has frequently suffered from war and other calamities, yet it has all along held a leading rank among the cities of Italy; but it is not distinguished for trade or manufactures.—Native, Livy.

The university of Padua was founded by Charlemagne, and enlarged by the emperor Frederic II., and pope Urban IV. It was at one time of great celebrity, and is said to have contained 18,000 students. The buildings are among the finest of the kind in Europe. It has

3 faculties, with 32 professors, and, in 1819, had 793 students. The botanic garden is one of the most celebrated in Europe, and the university is particularly distinguished for its medical school. The observatory, the anatomical theatre, the cabinet of natural history, &c. are all on a large scale. The library is said to contain 100,000 volumes.

Pahang, or Pahân, or Pân, s-p. Malacca, on E. coast; called by the Portuguese Paon, and by the Arabs Fân. Lon. 103. 36. E. Lat. 3.40. N. It is situated about 4 leagues from the sea, and inhabited only by nobility, the people dwelling only in the suburbs. This place, which is not very large, is enclosed by a wall, made of the trunks of trees joined close together, and about 24 feet in height, strengthened at each end with a bastion, but not filled with earth. The streets are fenced on both sides with hedges of reeds, and planted with cocoa and other trees; so that Pahang looks more like an assemblage of gardens belonging to a suburb than a regular city. The houses likewise are generally built with reeds and straw, only the king's palace is of wood; for Pahang was formerly the capital of a kingdom, which lay between Johor and Patany, but at present it makes a part of Johor.—The river is broad, but not navigable for galleys, except at high water. The adjacent country is very low, but fruitful enough; producing pepper, eagle and kalambak woods, coarse gold, nutmegs, mace, sapan-wood, diamonds, and hog-stones, reckoned more efficacious than the bezoar-stones. Deeper in the country elephants are very numerous.

Paisley, (an. Vandura,) t. Scot. in Renfrewshire, on the White Cart; 3 S. of the Clyde, 7 S. by W. Glasgow, 17 SE. Greenock, 52 W. Edinburgh. Lon. 4. 22. W. Lat. 55. 58. N. Pop. in 1792, 24,592; in 1801, 31,179; in 1811, 36,722; and in 1820, stated at 46,000. In these statements the Abbey parish is included; the whole being about 2 1-2 miles long, and 1 1-2 broad. Pop. of the town properly so called, in 1811, 19,937.

It is an ancient town, formerly small, but began to flourish by its manufactures soon after the union. It is delightfully situated on both sides of the White Cart, over which are 3 bridges. The town is well built of stone, and contains many excellent public and private edifices. It contains 18 houses of public worship; 6 for the established church, 2 for Relief, 2 Methodist, 1 Episcopal, 1 Burgher, 1 Antiburgher, 1 Cameronian, and 1 Catholic. There are several congregations of other sects that assemble for worship in rooms. The town has various charitable institutions and associations; a grammar school well endowed, founded in 1576; many other schools, and 3 public libraries.

Paisley has risen rapidly from small beginnings to great commercial importance; and is much celebrated for some of its branches of manufacture, particularly for all kinds of fancy goods in silk and cotton, goods which for elegance and beauty are unrivalled. It is the chief seat of the fancy muslin manufacture. The number of persons employed, in 1805, in the manufacture of muslin, silk, cotton spinning, threads, tape, leather, soap, candles, in the distilleries, and founderies, was stated at 29,030; the value produced 1,253,700*l*.

Palatinate of the Rhine, or Lower Palatinate, former name of a country of Germany, lying on both sides of the Rhine, having Mentz on the north. Pop. about 305,000. Sq. m. 1,600. Heidelberg was the capital till 1719, when the elector palatine made Mannheim the residence of his court. In 1777, the branch of the family that governed Bavaria becoming extinct, the elector Palatinate succeeded to his states, removed to Munich, and governed them conjunctly with his Rhenish territories. Since 1815, the Palatinate has been included in Baden, Hesse-Darmstadt, and the Bavarian circle of the Rhine. This country is partly mountainous, but fertile, producing corn, pulse, fruit, chestnuts, and walnuts; and having also fine pasturage, and a good breed of cattle; together with plantations of tobacco, as also good Neckar and Rhenish wine.

Palatinate, (Upper), former name of a province of Germany, bordering on Bohemia and Franconia; now forming a part of the Bavarian circles of the Regen and the Upper Maine. Pop. 290,000. Sq. m. 2,760. Amberg was the capital. It formed a part of the dominions of the elector Palatine, till 1620, when it was lost by the reigning elector, the son-in-law of James I. of England. It has since remained in the possession of Bavaria.

Palembang, Palambang, or Palimbang, t. Su-matra, capital of a district, on NE. coast, on the river Palembang, about 60 miles from the sea. Lon. 104. 54. E. Lat. 2. 59. S. It is the emporium of the inland trade of Sumatra, situated in a flat marshy tract, intersected by several little branches of the river, which form about 20 or 30 islands; whence it has been called the "City of Twenty Islands." One of these contains the brick palace of the sultan, consisting of several detached buildings, surrounded by a high brick wall. The other houses are mostly of timber. The pepper trade of Palembang was formerly exclusively in the hands of the Dutch; but the Dutch factory has been demolished. The Chinese campongs contain about 700 families. The number of Arabs is about 300. The remaining population is stated at 20 or 30,000.

The articles of commerce supplied by the country of Palembang are pepper, rattans, gambir, silk, cotton, damor, ivory, cat's eyes, sulphur, salt, wax, rice, benzoin, indigo, tobacco, areca, buffaloes, gold, and ebony. Mahometanism is the prevailing religion. The character of the natives is represented as bad.

Palermo, (an. Panormus,) city, Sicily, capital of the island, on the western shore of a bay on the north coast; 115 W. Messina, 180 S. by W. Naples. Lon. 13. 20. E. Lat. 38. 7. N. Pop. probably about 130,000, but variously estimated from 70,000 to 200,000. Abp. see. It is situated on a beautiful plain, presenting the appearance of a magnificent garden, filled with fruit trees, and watered by rivulets. The city, when approached by sea, or when seen from Monte Pelegrino, a high hill to the north, presents a most enchanting prospect. Nor is this favourable impression effaced on first entering the town: the principal streets are spacious and handsome; in the magnificence of its churches, the city is second only to Rome; the houses in general have something striking in their architecture; and the fountains, statues, and busts in front of them, seem appropriate decorations of a capital; but a more close inspection, particularly into the interior of these apparently magnificent buildings, soon lessens our admiration, the architecture of the city being too uniform, and not unfrequently heavy. The form of the city is nearly circular. The two principal streets, the Cassaro and Strada Nuovo, are about a mile long, and intersect at right angles. They are spacious, consist of elegant buildings, and are well paved. Most of the other streets are narrow, winding, and dirty. The most frequented of the public walks, is the Marina, a raised platform or terrace, 80 paces wide, extending more than a mile along the bay. At the eastern extremity is a delightful public garden, called the Flora, and adjoining it, the botanic garden.

Palermo is the seat of the viceroy, and contains a royal palace, a vast irregular pile of buildings, having a conspicuous situation on the street Cassaro. The city contains 3 theatres, more than 40 monasteries, 50 convents, 3 public libraries, a university, and a considerable number of establishments for charity and education, but the mode of management is imperfect. The university is an extensive pile of building, with an observatory, a cabinet of metals and natural curiosities, and professors who give lectures in the various branches of science to students who attend without expense. The number of students in 1820 was about 500.

On entering Palermo the stranger is struck with the amazing crowd of people in the streets, said to exceed in some parts the throng of London; yet the trade is not very great. The city swarms with beggars of the most wretched appearance. Poverty is common to all ranks, there being many persons dignified with titles, who have no means of supporting their rank, and are prevented by family pride from engaging in trade. The exports consists of wine, oil, silk, satin, and some other manufactures. The thermometer in winter seldom sinks below 50 : in summer it is from 80 to 90. The Sirocco is very oppressive, but not of frequent occurrence. The city has suffered repeatedly from earthquakes, particularly in 1693 and 1726.

Palestine, first called the Land of Canaan, afterwards the Land of Promise, or the Promised Land, the Land of Israel, the Holy Land, and by way of pre-eminence, the Land, country, now included in Asiatic Turkey ; the part west of the Jordon, is bounded N. by the mountain of Anti Libanus, E. by the river Jordon and the Dead sea, S. by Arabia Petræa, and W. by the Mediterranean sea. In length it is about 170 miles, but its breadth greatly varies, being in some places 58 miles, and in others 22.

Divisions. This country was divided by Joshua among the 12 tribes of the Israelites ; Judah, Benjamin, Simeon, Dan, Ephraim, Zebulon, Issachar, Asher, Naphtali, and part of Manasseh, had their portion allotted on the western, commonly called this side of Jordon ; while Reuben, Gad, and the remaining part of Manasseh, were placed on the eastern side, commonly called beyond Jordon. The Romans, on obtaining full possession of this country, divided the part west of the Jordon into 3 tetrarchies, viz. Judea proper, Samaria, and Galilee. The part east of the Jordon was divided into the smaller districts of Peræa, Decapolis, Gaulonitis, Galaditis, Batanæa, and Auranitis. Neither the name nor division of Palestine, nor any of the above sub-divisions are now recognised by the natives or the Turkish government ; but as to administration, the country is included partly in the pachalic of Acre, and partly in that of Damascus.

Population. The land of Canaan contained a great number of towns and villages at the time when it was invaded by the Israelites, and in after ages it was very populous. In the time of David the number of combatants in the kingdom of Israel was stated at 1,100,000 ; and from this the total population has been computed at 8,000,000. The population is now comparatively small, but composed of various descriptions ; viz. Turks, who occupy all the civil and military posts ; Arabs, abounding in the country districts ; Greeks, Christians, and Jews. There is a considerable number of monks, and in every considerable town, there is at least one convent ; but the monks, according to Dr. Clarke, are extremely ignorant and vicious.

Towns. Chief town of Judea, Jerusalem ; of Samaria, anciently Samaria, in modern times Naplous ; of Galilee, Nazareth. Other towns, Acre, Jaffa, Gaza, Ramla, Hebron, Tabaria, Bethlehem, &c.

Lakes and rivers. The lakes are Asphaltites, Genesareth, and Merom. The Jordon is the only considerable river.

Face of the country, &c. The face of the country is beautifully variegated by mountains, hills, valleys, and plains. The most remarkable mountains are Lebanon, Hermon, Carmel, Tabor, Ephraim, and Ebal.

Soil. The scriptures in describing the great fruitfulness of this country, characterize it as "a land flowing with milk and honey." Although some have represented it as barren, yet according to the best informed travellers, the greater part displays a truly luxuriant fertility, corresponding entirely to the description of the promised land ; and where well cultivated, it is exceedingly productive.

Productions. Palestine abounds with almost every article that is necessary or useful for the life of man ; as wheat, barley, pulse of all kinds, fruit, wine, oil, tobacco, cotton, and silk. The trade consists chiefly in the export of oil, and the import of rice.

Climate. The climate is exceedingly good. It seldom rains, but the deficiency is supplied by the most abundant dews. The cold is never excessive ; and although the summer heats are great, yet they are mitigated by a periodical breeze, which renders them supportable.

Palm Islands, chain of islands near NE. coast of New-Holland, extending about 30 miles in length, at the entrance of Halifax bay. Lon. 213. 25. W. Lat. 18. 53. S.

Palma, one of the Canary islands, about 60 miles in circumference, anciently called Capraria, said by some to be so called from a volcano of that name, though other writers conjecture that both the island and mountain were so called from the great number of goats bred here. The soil is fertile in corn, wine, and sugar-canes, as well as in fruit, quadrupeds, and birds of all kinds. This island has a handsome town, called Ciudad de las Palmas, and a safe harbour, well frequented by the shipping of different nations, which come hither for wines; these being reckoned equal to Malmsey, and by some thought the best of any produced in the Canaries. These wines, and particularly what is made at a place called Brenin, are bought up with avidity; and of this last there are exported to the West-Indies, and elsewhere, at least 12,000 pipes a year. Lon. 17. 45. W. Lat. 28. 36. N. Pop. 22,600.

N. Pop. 29,529. H. 3,000. Bp. see. It stands on the slope of a hill, and when viewed from the bay has a picturesque appearance. It is surrounded with walls flanked with bastions, but is not capable of sustaining a long siege. Part of the streets are narrow and ill paved; others are spacious and regular. Two of the most conspicuous of the public buildings, are the Gothic cathedral, and government house. It contains 4 hospitals, 2 public libraries, a drawing academy, and a navigation school. The inhabitants are employed in the manufactures of woollen and silk, and in trade and navigation.

Palmyra, or Tadmor, celebrated city, Syria, now in ruins; 85 W. of the Euphrates, 117 E. of the Mediterranean, 130 NE. Damascus. Lon. 38. 48. E. Lat. 34. 29. N. It is situated in the midst of a large plain, in the heart of the desert of Syria, surrounded on three sides by a long chain of mountains. This city, to which oriental commodities were carried in ancient times, is supposed to have been originally built by Solomon, after he had conquered the king of Hamathzoba, a little Syrian prince, within whose dominions the country lay, in which this city was afterwards erected. It was called by Solomon, Tadmor, and, from its situation in the midst of a sandy desert, which surrounded it on all sides, Tadmor in the Wilderness. As the singularity of its situation was sufficient to charm whoever attentively considered it, so upon the decline of the Macedonian empire in the East, it became a free city, or rather the head of a small principality, under the name of Palmyra, from whence the country under its jurisdiction was called Palmyrene. Trajan called it Adrianople. The only brilliant part of the history of Palmyra was under Odenathus and his queen Zenobia, who had for her secretary the distinguished Greek author Longinus.

Antiquity has left nothing, either in Greece or Rome to be compared with the magnificence of the ruins of Palmyra. They appear to be of two different and distinct periods. Of the inscriptions, none are earlier than the birth of Christ, and none are later than the destruction of the city by Aurelian, except one which mentions Dioclesian. The city was formerly surrounded by palms and fig-trees, and covered an extent of ground, according to the Arabs, 10 m. in circuit. The walls are flanked with square towers, and are 3 m. in circ. But of all the monuments of art and magnificence, the most considerable is the Temple of the Sun. The whole space containing its ruin is a square of 220 yards, encompassed with a stately wall, and adorned with pilasters within and without, to the number of 62 on a side. Within the court are the remains of two rows of very noble marble pillars 37 feet high; the temple was encompassed by another row of pillars 50 feet high; but the temple itself was only 33 yards in length, and 13 or 14 in breadth. This is now converted into a mosque. There are various other ruins of building, towers, pillars, obelisks, and sepulchres.—This once splendid city is now inhabited by about 30 Arab families, who have built their huts in the court of the great temple.

Panama, pr. New Grenada, one of those styled Terra Firma, bounded N. by the Spanish Main, E. by the province of Darien, S. by the Pacific ocean, and W. by Veragua. Most of the towns and villages of the province of Panama are situated in small plains along the shore, the rest of the country being covered with enormous and craggy mountains, uninhabited on account of their sterility. This province contains 3 cities, 12 villages, and a great number of rancheiras, or assemblages of Indian huts. The climate is very hot; the soil fertile, but a great part of the country is still covered with thick forests. The mines produce but little gold and silver, and the pearl fishery, formerly valuable, is now of little importance.

Panama, city & s-p. S. America, built on the Isthmus of Darien, at the bottom of a large bay of the Pacific ocean, and the capital of a province. Lon. 79. 19. W. Lat. 8. 59. N. Pop. 10,000. It is surrounded with a wall of free stone, and defended with a large garrison of regulars. The houses were at first in general of wood, having but one story, and a tiled roof. Without the walls is an open suburb, larger than the city itself, and the houses of the same materials and construction. The streets both of the city and suburbs are straight, broad, and for the most part paved. The city was almost entirely burnt down, in the year 1737; since this misfortune, it has been again rebuilt, and the greatest part of the houses are of stone. It is the see of a bishop, and contains a handsome cathedral of stone, several churches, monasteries, convents, and an excellent hospital.

The harbour of Panama is formed in its road by the shelter of several islands, where ships lie very safe, at about two and a half or three leagues distance from the city. The tides are regular, and rise from 13 to 16 feet, and it is high water at the full and change at three o'clock. The water rises and falls considerably, so that the shore, lying on a gentle slope, is at low water left dry to a great distance. The trade of Panama is very considerable; it is the port where the ships from Lima, Guayaquil, &c. unload the treasure sent to Old Spain, and the staple for the goods brought up the river Chagrie.

The second was fought between Abdallah king of Candahar and the Mahrattas, in the year 1761. It was one of the most bloody battles ever fought in Hindoostan; the army of Abdallah amounted to 150,000; that of the Mahrattas was not less than 200,000. The carnage was dreadful, and the number of Mahratta prisoners 40,000. They lost the flower of their army, and their power after that period declined.

Paraguay, pr. Buenos Ayres, bounded N. & E. by Brazil, S. by Buenos Ayres, and W. by Tucuman, Chacos, and Chiquitos; between Lat. 21. 30. and 27. S. Pop. in 1809, stated at 97,480; by Brackenridge at 110,000, mostly Indians. Chief town, Assumption. The great natural features are its numerous rivers, swamps, lakes, plains, and forests. The two great rivers are the Parana, which flows in the east and south, and the Paraguay on the west. The country to the extent of several hundred miles, is flat, and during the rainy season the rivers overflow their banks and inundate far and wide the adjacent country. The climate is generally moist and temperate, though in some parts cold. The soil is of great fertility, producing European fruits and grains in great abundance; also, tobacco, cotton, Jesuit's bark, sarsaparilla, jalap, rhubarb, &c.; but the most remarkable production is the Paraguay tea, or matte, a plant which rises about a foot and a half high, with slender branches, and leaves similar to those of senna. Great quantities of this tea are consumed not only in Buenos Ayres, but also in Chili and Peru, almost every person taking it two or three times a day. The smell and colour are nearly as fine as those of Chinese tea. The annual exports of this herb from Paraguay is stated to amount to 2,000,000 piasters. Other exports are tobacco, sugar, cotton, hides, tallow, wax, honey, cattle, horses, mules, leather, wool, &c.

Pop. about 20,000. It is built on a sandy rock, which causes the streets to be very easy to tread. The houses are chiefly built of timber, mostly of 2, and some of 3 stories, and generally without windows on account of the heat; and attached to them are pleasant gardens. The city contains houses for the governor and commandant, a military hospital, a Protestant ch., a Catholic ch., a Luth. chapel, and 2 synagogues. The streets are all perfectly straight, and lined with trees, such as oranges, lemons, shaddocks, and tamarinds, which appear in perennial bloom, and render the town exceedingly delightful. It is described as one of the most beautiful places in the world. The river before the town is about a mile wide, and there is a noble road for shipping. The exports are coffee, sugar, cocoa, cotton, and indigo. It is a lively place, being crowded with planters, sailors, soldiers, Jews, Indians, and negroes, while the river is constantly covered with barges. In Jan. 1821, a tremendous fire broke out here and consumed the most populous part of the town. The Dutch and Catholic churches, 2 elegant edifices, 394 dwelling houses, most of the public buildings, in all, including stores, negro houses, &c. 1,500 buildings were laid in ashes.

Parga, or Perga, s-p. Albania, on the coast of the Adriatic, near its entrance; 25 WNW.
Arta, 35 SW. Joannina. Pop. 2,700. It is a small fortified town, built on a conical rock, three sides of which are washed by the sea. It has but little commerce. It was a port of the ancient Epines.
For upwards of 4 centuries it had been in the enjoyment of liberty, and though situated on the continent, was considered as an out-port of the confederacy of the Seven islands. The treaty of Paris of 1815 contained a stipulation for the occupancy of Parga by the Turkish troops.
On the execution of this stipulation, in 1819, the inhabitants of Parga, amounting to 2,700, rather than become subject to the Turks, chose to emigrate, and they were all conveyed to Corfu and Paxo, leaving the town desolate. The territory of Parga is about 6 miles along the coast, and 2 in depth; the landscape is beautiful, and affords a most picturesque scenery. It consists almost wholly of one continued olive grove, inter-sprinkled with gardens, orchards of orange and lime trees, and little cottages.

Paris, (an. Lutetia, or Lutetia Parisiorum, or Parisii.) capital of France, and one of the finest cities in the world, in the department of the Seine, on the Seine; 112 SE. Havre de Grace at the mouth of the river, 225 SE. London, 625 W. Vienna, 630 NNE. Madrid. Lon. 2. 20. E. Greenwich; 20. E. Ferro. Lat. 48. 51. N. Pop. in 1807, 547,756; in 1817, 715,595; in 1820, 713,966. Families, in 1817, 227,252. H. 26,800. Births, in 1815, 22,612; 8,982 out of wedlock, i. e. nearly 2 in five. Deaths, in 1820, 24,211; births 24,858; 8,370 out of wedlock. More than 1-3d of the people die in the hospitals, and more than 100,000 receive support from public charity. In 1818, there were reckoned in Paris 1,109 streets, 110 alleys, 111 passages, 301 quays, 18 boulevards, 87 places, 31 cross streets, 121 courts, 10 public promenades, 56 barriers, 16 gates, 16 bridges, 10 halls, 28 market places, 9 prisons, 13 barracks, 12 palaces, 2 cathedrals, 38 chh., 3 Prot. chh., 3 synagogues, 4 temples, 3 colleges, 15 hospitals, 9 asylums for monks, 10 theatres, 30 fountains, 6 public libraries, and 37 establishments for public instruction.

Paris is the residence of the king and his court, the seat of an archbishop, and the centre of the literature of France. It is built on both banks of the Seine, and on two islands in the river. The country around is more level, and less diversified with gardens, parks, and country houses than the environs of London, but none of the approaches to London can be compared to the entrance to Paris by the great road from the west, passing through St. Germain. The form of the city is nearly circular, and it is surrounded by a great wall, erected in 1787, 17 miles in circuit; but it comprises particularly to the west, several tracts of open ground. The streets, in general, of Paris are greatly inferior in width and accommodation to those of London. They are all lighted by reflecting lamps, suspended from a great height in the middle of the streets. No street, however, in London can be compared to the Boulevards of Paris. They occupy the space appropriated to the defence of the city in former ages, when its circumference did not exceed 7 miles. This space has been converted into a magnificent street, from 200 to 300 feet wide, and more than 2 miles long. In the middle is a wide road unpaved; on each side of the road, a row of lofty trees, and between each row of trees and the parallel row of magnificent houses of stone, are spacious gravelled walks for foot passengers. The squares are generally small, and are surrounded with stately buildings. The finest one is the Place Vendome, of octagonal form, having an open space of only 500 feet long, and 400 broad. The most remarkable of the public monuments, is the Column in the Place Vendome, erected by Bonaparte to commemorate his successes in Germany, in 1805. It is a great brazen pillar, the materials of which are said to have been obtained by melting the cannon of the vanquished. Its diameter is 12 feet; its height 133; its form an imitation of Trajan's pillar at Rome; the expenses of its erection 60,000*l*.

In palaces and public structures of the first rank, Paris is greatly superior to London. The Tuileries, the present royal residence, was begun in the 16th century and finished in the 17th. It extends from north to south, including the pavilion at each end, above 1,000 feet. It is a noble and venerable structure, exhibiting several orders of architecture, and has, when viewed through the shady avenues, an air of romantic grandeur. The Louvre is a very elegant structure and a model of symmetry, of a square form, 525 feet in length, with a large interior court, 400 feet by 400. It is used as a depot in its magnificent halls for objects of taste and art. The gallery of the Louvre is a long range detached from the main building, and extending parallel to the bank of the river, all the way to the Tuileries, a quarter of a mile distant. The palace of the Luxembourg is a superb edifice and its gardens are spacious and beautiful.—Among the remarkable buildings unconnected with the crown, are the Hotel des Invalides, a very large and elegant structure, the Military School, at one end of the Champ de Mars, the palace of the Legion of Honour, the building of the Institute, the mint, the granary, and the exchange. Notre Dame, the metropolitan church, is a large Gothic building; but no church in Paris equals, in size or magnificence, St. Paul's in London. The Palais Royal has long ceased to be a royal residence. It is a large pile of building, containing in itself a little world, and has long been considered one of the principal curiosities of the city. It is not only a grand bazar, but a centre of amusement, and the general rendezvous of foreigners who visit Paris. The private houses in Paris are higher than in London, having frequently 5, 6, and sometimes 7 stories. They are built of freestone, from quarries in the immediate vicinity and extending in various directions under the city. No coal is used in Paris for fuel, and the edifices unlike those of London, which have received a dark hue from the use of coal, are of a dazzling brightness.

The Seine, which intersects the city nearly in the middle, has not half the width of the Thames; and though its banks are termed quays, yet it wants, almost entirely, the enlivening aspect of shipping. Still the effect of the river is very pleasant. The manufactures of Paris, as of London, consist chiefly of articles of taste or nice workmanship, as jewellery, watches, clocks, porcelain, cabinet ware, mathematical instruments, silks, artificial flowers, plate glass, carpets, &c. It is almost exclusively the seat of wholesale bookselling and printing in France. The foreign produce consumed in the city, is imported chiefly at Havre de Grace. Exports and imports take place in a great degree by land carriage; the navigable approaches being used chiefly for wood and other bulky articles.

Paris contains various literary and scientific associations, at the head of which is the Institute, a scientific body, exceeding in reputation any other learned society in the world. It is composed of nearly 200 members, divided since 1816, into 4 classes, 1st of physical and mathematical science, 2d of the literature of France and the French language, 3d of history and ancient literature, 4th of the fine arts. The university founded in 1252, named the Sorbonne, was suspended in the fervour of the revolution; but it has long been re-established on a very extensive plan, and is at the head of establishments of education in France. It comprises a number of classes for each of the 5 faculties, theology, law, medicine, classic literature, and the sciences. The admission to the lectures is gratuitous. Among the other literary associations are the College Royal of France, 4 lycees, the Athenée, the royal school of fine arts, military school, polytechnic school, the school of medicine, the Bureau of Longitude, &c.—Among the interesting collections those of the Louvre hold the first rank. The gallery is of great length, and lined on both sides with the finest productions of modern painters, divided into French, Italian, and Flemish schools. The number of pieces is upwards of 1,100. Next in interest is the museum of natural history; also the Jardin des Plantes extending nearly half a mile in length, laid out with great taste, and exhibiting groups of plants from almost every region on the globe; also a collection of animals of various latitudes, as lions, elephants, bears, &c. Paris is very rich in libraries which are accessible to all persons without introduction. The Royal Library, one of the largest in Europe, contains 360,000, or according to the picture of Paris, 800,000 printed volumes, 72,000 MS., 5,000 volumes of engravings, 30,000 gold medals, 30,000 silver medals, and 40,000 copper medals. The Library of the Arsenal contains 150,000 vols., that of St. Genevieve 110,000 vols., the Pantheon 80,000 vols., and the Mazarine Library 93,000 vols. The public reading rooms are numerous. Paris is still more the centre of elegant amusements for France than London is for England, being the residence during the autumn and winter of all who can afford the gratification of a town life. The expense of living is about 30 per cent. less than in London.—A treaty, styled the Holy Alliance, was concluded and signed at Paris, Sept. 26, 1815, between the emperors of Russia and Austria, and the king of Prussia.—Natives, Moliere, Le Brun, Catinet, Prince Eugene, Rollin, J. B. Rousseau, Helvetius, Voltaire, Dorat, D'Anville, Beaumarchais, D'Alembert, Lavoisier, Sedaine.

The productions, wheat, maize, vines, hemp, saffron, silk, vegetables, and fruit. The pastures are rich. The famous Parmesan cheese, originally the product of this country, is now made chiefly in the district of Lodi. The rivers are the Po, Taro, Trebia, and Lenza. The inhabitants are almost all Catholics, and there are 3 bishops. The executive power is in the hands of a duke, who is not limited by any representative assembly.

Parma is beautifully situated in a fertile plain, and is about 3 miles in circ., surrounded by a ditch and mound, and has a citadel, formerly reckoned the strongest in Italy. The streets are broad, straight, and tolerably clean, but the houses are of indifferent architecture, seldom above 2 stories. It contains a cathedral, and 35 chh., less remarkable for their architecture, than their paintings. The ducal palace is a great range of buildings, containing a large public library, academy of arts, and the museum of painting and sculpture. Connected with it is the great theatre, similar to the Olympic theatre at Vicenza, and said to be capable of containing 9,000 spectators.

The university was founded in 1599. The buildings are large and elegant, containing an anatomical hall, a chemical laboratory, a museum of natural history, and an observatory. The average number of students is about 400. The college for the sons of the gentry, founded in 1600, was calculated for 500 students, but seldom has more than 50. The manufactures of Parma are limited, consisting of silk, hats, fustian, and printing books. Natives, Mazzucolo, or Parmegiano, and Lanfranco.

The Castalian fountain rises between the 2 summits, and flows near Castri, ancient Delphi. It is the highest mountain in Greece, having an elevation of 7 or 8,000 feet; covered in winter with snow and ice, but may be ascended even in Dec. and Jan., if the weather be mild. From the summit is enjoyed a delightful and extensive view.

Paros, or Baru, isl. in the Grecian Archipelago, and one of those anciently called Cyclades; about 36 miles in circumference. Besides Paros, this island was likewise called Pactia, Minoa, or Minoia, Demetrias, Zacynthus, Elyria, Hileassa, and Cabarnis. It was anciently a rich and powerful island, being called by Stephanus, the most wealthy and happy of the Cyclades; and by Cornelius Nepos, an island elated with its riches. The city of Paros, which was the metropolis of the island, is styled by Stephanus a potent city, and one of the largest in the Archipelago. Paros, or as the natives call it, Parechia, is supposed to have been built upon its ruins; the neighbouring country abounds with valuable monuments of antiquity; the very walls of the present city are built with columns, architraves, and pedestals, mingled with pieces of ancient marble of a surprising size.

Paros was formerly famous for its fine marble, which was of an extraordinary whiteness, and in such request among the ancients, that the best statuaries used no other. The Apollo Belvidere, the Venus de Medicis, &c. are of this beautiful material. There are still to be seen caverns of an extraordinary depth, which the modern inhabitants and travellers take to be ancient quarries. In one of the quarries, distant about 4 miles from the present city of Parechia, is still to be seen a basso relievo, cut in the rock, and containing 29 figures of nymphs and satyrs, dancing a kind of brawl. On the decline of the eastern empire, the quarries were entirely neglected, and they have never been re-opened. The statuaries, Phidias and Praxitiles, were natives of Paros.

The island is provided with several capacious and safe harbours, of which Naussa is the most considerable, and was anciently much resorted to by traders. The surface is mountainous, but tolerably fertile, and in some parts well cultivated. It nourishes a great number of sheep, and yields wheat, barley, fruit, legumes, and particularly cotton. Before the war of Candia, the inhabitants made a great deal of oil; but while the army of the Venetians remained on the island, they burnt all the olive trees. Lon. 25. 18. E. Lat. 37. 4. N. Patagonia, or Land of Magellan, country, S. A. bounded N. by Buenos Ayres, E. by the Atlantic, S. by the Straits of Magellan, and W. by the S. Pacific ocean; extending from the 63d to the 75th deg. of W. Lon. and from the 38th to the 54th of S. Lat. The people are reported to be of a gigantic stature, and, notwithstanding the inclemency of the climate, to go almost naked. That they are barbarous, is evinced by the treatment of the few unfortunate Europeans who have fallen into their hands. They differ, indeed, in manners, as they are divided into a great variety of nations. Towards the straits they are said to be perfectly savage; on the frontiers of the Spanish and Portuguese settlements they greatly resemble the Chilians. Some of the inhabitants seen by Commodore Byron, in the year 1764, he supposed to be about 7 feet in height. Capt. Wallis, in the year 1766, measured one of the tallest, and found his height to be 6 feet 7 inches; but he says the greatest part of them was from 5 feet 10 to 6 feet. Their complexion is a dark copper colour, like that of the Indians in North America. They have many horses and dogs. Little is known respecting the productions of the country.

Patmos, or Pathmos, now Patino, or Palmosa, island in the Grecian Archipelago; 16 SW. Samos. Lon. 26. 24. E. Lat. 37. 24. N. Pop. about 1,500. It is about 20 miles in circ. and one of the most barren in all the Archipelago, without wood, without rivers, and almost without gardens; on the other hand, the spring water is pure, and the air healthy. The inhabitants are chiefly Greek Christians, sailors, or ship-builders; they sail as far as Venice, whither they carry cotton, and stockings of their own manufacture. There is plenty of rabbits, pigeons, partridges, and quails.

In the time of the Romans, this island was a place of exile, and the place to which St. John was banished. A grotto in a rock, now converted into a monastery called the Monastery of the Apocalypse, or of St. John, is pointed out as the spot where that apostle wrote the Apocalypse. It is a strong fortress, having several towers, and lofty, thick walls. Many ancient manuscripts, are still preserved in it. This church belongs to a convent, the abbot of which is prince of the island, and pays annually 1,000 crowns to the Grand Signior, besides presents to the Captain Pacha.

Patna, city, Hind. capital of Bahar, and residence of a governor; 250 NW. Calcutta. Lon. 85. 21. E. Lat. 25. 37. N. Pop. according to Hamilton not less than 150,000; some have stated it at nearly 500,000. It is situated on S. bank of the Ganges, which is here during the rainy season 5 miles wide, and deep enough to float a ship of war. The city is about 4 miles long, and 1 broad, inclosed by a brick wall, having small round bastions, but many parts are fallen to decay. It contains some mosques and temples, but few of the houses exceed one or two stories in height; and are generally built of mud, and make a mean appearance. The houses of the Europeans are in the suburbs, called Bankypore, or Bankirpoor, and are handsomely built of brick. The surrounding country is perfectly flat, and produces the finest opium and salt petre, and great quantities of grain, also indigo and sugar. It carries on a large trade with Calcutta. It has been in the possession of the British, since 1763, and is the residence of a provincial court of appeal, &c. It is a very ancient city; and probably its modern name may be derived from Pataliputra, or Patelpoothar; supposed to be the ancient Pali-bothra.

Pavia, (an. Ticinum, or Ticinum, or Papia), city, Aust. Italy, formerly capital of Pavese, or the duchy of Pavia, now of a delegation, in the government of Milan, on the Tesino, situated in a beautiful plain; 17 S. Milan, 72 W. Mantua. Lon. 9. 10. E. Lat. 45. 11. N. Pop. 23,237. Bp. see. The citadel was once strong, but the fortifications have been neglected; the streets are broad and straight, with some good buildings, but nothing at present appears to announce that it was once the capital of Lombardy. Besides the cathedral, it contains 18 parish churches, and 38 convents. The trade is inconsiderable, & silk is the only article manufactured here.

The university of Pavia is said to be the most ancient in Europe, being founded by Charlemagne in 791, and has produced a number of eminent men. It has 13 colleges, a cabinet of natural history, a very extensive botanic garden, an anatomical theatre, an anatomical museum, a library of 30,000 volumes, 33 professors, and, in 1819, 376 students, more than 2-3ds in medicine.—The delegation of Pavia contains 117,000 inh. and 320 sq. m. The surface mostly level, the climate mild and salubrious, and the soil very fertile. Rice, vines, silk, and cattle are its chief products.

Pausilippo, celebrated mountain and grotto, near the city of Naples. This grotto or passage is nearly a mile in length, and is made through the mountain, 20 feet in breadth, and 30 in height. Vedius Pollio had a magnificent villa on Mount Pausilippus, with a large reservoir or pond. Virgil's tomb is said to be above the entrance of the grotto of Pausilippo, and is thus described by Mr. Blainville : "It is partly covered with ivy, fig-trees, and brambles, which have taken root here, and on the top of it is a laurel-tree, which seems to crown it. The mausoleum on the inside is about 18 feet square, and 13 or 14 feet high from the floor to the top of the roof." The ruins of this mausoleum are very picturesque ; but some travellers will not allow it to be the tomb of Virgil.—The whole hill of Pausilippo is covered with country seats and gardens, for summer resort, being protected from the heat, south and west. In the middle of the passage is a church or chapel ; but the dust raised by the horses and carriages is exceedingly offensive.

Payta, or St. Michel de Payta, t. Peru, in Truxillo, founded by Francis Pizarro, in the year 1531 ; 550 NNW. Callao. Lon. 81. 6. W. Lat. 5. 10. S. It is small, not containing above 200 families. The houses are only ground-floors, the walls of split canes and mud, and covered with leaves. These edifices, though extremely slight, are abundantly sufficient for a climate where rain is considered as a prodigy, and is not seen in many years ; so that a small quantity falling here in 1728, many of the buildings were ruined ; the walls as it were melting away before it. The only house built of stone in the whole place, is that of the governor. The inhabitants of Payta are principally Indians and black slaves, or at least Mestizoes, there being but few whites. The port of Payta, though in reality little more than a bay, is esteemed the best on the coast, and is indeed a very secure anchoring place. It is greatly frequented by all vessels coming from the north.

Paz, t. Mexico, in Valladolid ; 120 NNW. Mexico. Lon. 100. 28. W. Lat. 20. 59. N. Pop. about 3,000.

Paz, (La,) pr. Buenos Ayres, full of mountains, one of which, called Illimani, contains, in all probability, immense riches ; for a crag of it being some years since broken off by a flash of lightning, such a quantity of gold was found among the fragments, that it was sold for some time at La Paz for eight pieces of eight the ounce. But the summit of this mountain being perpetually covered with ice and snow, no attempt has been made to open a mine.

Paz, (La,) city, Buenos Ayres, capital of a province of the same name ; 120 ESE. Arequipa. Lon. 68. 36. W. Lat. 17. 15. S. Pop. according to Helms 20,000, and according to Brackenridge 40,000. Bp. see. It is situated among the breaches of the mountains, on the side of a valley, through which a pretty large river flows, and about 12 leagues distant from the Cordillera. The ground on which it stands is not only unequal, but surrounded by mountains. When the river is swelled by rains, or melted snow from the Cordillera, its current forces along huge masses of rocks with some grains of gold, which are found after the water has subsided. The city of La Paz is of a middling size, and the houses well built. It contains a cathedral, 4 churches, a hospital, a college, and 5 convents. One great article of trade is Paraguay tea, for which about 200,000 piasters are annually received.

Pegongmew, or Paghan, t. Birmah, on the Irrawaddy ; 66 SW. Ava. Lon. 96. 36. E. Lat. 21. 24. N. It was once a large and opulent city, but now reduced, with little remains of its ancient grandeur, except ruined temples. It is said to have been the residence of 45 successive governors ; but was abandoned about 500 years ago, in consequence of divine admonition.

Pegu, or Begu, formerly a km. of Asia, now a province of the Birman empire, bounded N. by Aracan and Ava, E. and S. by Siam and the sea, and W. by part of Aracan, and the bay of Bengal. Pegu seems to be a level country without any considerable mountains, excepting some which surround it, and serve for a frontier towards the land, but is liable to be invaded not only by sea, but also by land, by means of the rivers which make their passage through those mountains. The two principal rivers are the Irrawaddy and Sitang. The air is healthy ; the soil very rich and fertile in rice, corn, fruit, and roots ; it likewise produces good timber of several kinds. The country abounds with elephants, buffaloes, goats, hogs, and other animals ; here is abundance of wild game, and deer in great plenty. There are mines not only of iron, tin, and gansa, or lead, which passes for money, but also of rubies, diamonds, and sapphires. The rubies are the best in the world ; but the diamonds are small. But the most valuable production is teak timber, for ship building. The principal ports are Rangoon, Sirian, & Negrais. The inhabitants are mostly idolaters of the sect of Boodh.

Pegu, city, Asia, and formerly capital of a kingdom of the same name, near the river Pegu. Lon. 96. 42. E. Lat. 18. 5. N. Pop. 7,000. This city, in the year 1600, was splendid, large, and populous, supposed to contain 150,000 inh. According to some Europeans, who saw it in its greatest splendour, it was very spacious, fair, and strong, surrounded with stone walls, and very wide ditches. It was divided into two cities, the old and new ; in the old lived the merchants and strangers ; and as the houses were only built with wood, or bamboo canes, covered with tiles, each had a warehouse of brick arched, to secure the goods from fires, which were frequent here.

The new city, inhabited by the king, the nobility, and the people of fashion, was very extensive and populous ; its figure square ; and in each side of the wall were 5 gates of stone, with many gilded towers by the side of it for posting sentries ; it was encompassed with broad ditches, in which were bred crocodiles, to deter people from wading over them. The streets were regular, running in a line from gate to gate, and so wide that 12 men might go abreast. Each house had a palm tree growing at the door, which formed a shade for passengers. The king's palace stood in the midst of this new city, built like a fortress, with walls and ditches. The houses and apartments within were of wood, all over gilded, and adorned with battlements covered with plates of gold ; within the gate was a spacious court, with lodgings on the sides for the king's choicest elephants, among which were 4 of a white colour. In 1757, this city was destroyed by Alompra king of Birmah. From that time Pegu ceased to be the royal seat, and fell to decay; so that, although 6 or 7 leagues in compass, not one twentieth part of it is now inhabited, and that only by the lower class of people; however, it is still the seat of the viceroy, who governs for the king of Birmah.

Peking, or Pekin, city, China, capital of the empire, situated in a very fertile plain, 20 leagues distant from the great wall. Lon. 116. 23. E. Lat. 39. 54. N. The city encloses an area of 14 sq. m., exclusive of the suburbs, and is divided into two towns, the one inhabited by Tartars, and the other by Chinese. The Chinese city has a wall of its own, enclosing an area of 9 square miles. The estimated population of Peking, says Sir G. Staunton, was carried in the last century, by the Jesuit Grimaldi, to 16,000,000. Another missionary reduces, at least, that of the Tartar city, to 1,250,000; according to the best information given to the embassy, the whole was about 3,000,000, but this number is probably exaggerated. The low houses of Peking seem scarcely sufficient for so vast a population; but very little room is occupied by a Chinese family, at least in the middling and lower classes of life. In their houses there are no superfluous apartments. A Chinese dwelling is generally surrounded by a wall 6 or 7 feet high; within this enclosure a whole family, of 3 generations, with all their respective wives and children, will frequently be found. One small room is made to serve for the individuals of its branch of the family, sleeping in different beds, divided only by mats hanging from the ceiling. One common room is used for eating.

The name Peking, which signifies the Northern Court, is given to distinguish it from Nanking, or the Southern Court. The emperor formerly resided in the latter; but the Tartars, a restless and warlike people, obliged the prince to remove his court to the northern provinces, that he might more effectually repel the incursions of those barbarians, by opposing to them the numerous militia, that he generally keeps around his person. This capital forms an exact square, and is divided into two cities; the first is inhabited by Chinese, the second by Tartars. These two cities, without including the suburbs, are 6 leagues in circumference.

The walls of the Tartar city are very lofty, and so thick, that 12 horsemen might easily ride abreast upon them; with spacious towers at intervals, a bow shot distant from one another, & large enough to contain bodies of reserve in case of necessity. The city has 9 gates, which are lofty, and well arched; over them are large pavilion-roofed towers, divided into 9 stories, each having several apertures or port holes; the lower story forms a large hall, for the use of the soldiers and officers who quit guard, and those appointed to relieve them. Before each gate a space is left of more than 360 feet; this is a kind of place of arms, inclosed by a semicircular wall, equal in height and thickness to that surrounding the city. The great road which ends here, is commanded by a pavilion-roofed tower, like the first, in such a manner that, as the cannon of the former can batter the houses of the city, those of the latter can sweep the adjacent country. The streets of Peking are straight, the principal ones about 120 feet wide, a full league in length, and bordered with shops. It is astonishing to see the immense concourse of people that continually fills them, and the confusion caused by the prodigious number of horses, camels, mules, and carriages, which cross or meet each other. It is very singular that in all this prodigious concourse no women are ever seen.

The emperor's palace stands in the middle of the Tartar city. It presents a large assemblage of vast buildings, extensive courts, and magnificent gardens, and is shut up on all sides by a double wall; the intervening space being occupied by houses belonging to the officers of the court, eunuchs, and by different tribunals. The exterior circumference of this immense palace is reckoned a league and a half. Although the Chinese architecture has no resemblance to that of Europe, the imperial palace of Peking does not fail to strike beholders by its extent, grandeur, and the regular disposition of its apartments. The royal hall, called Tai-hotien, or the Hall of the Grand Union, is built upon a terrace, about 18 feet in height, incrustated with white marble, and ornamented with balustrades of excellent workmanship. This hall is almost square, and about 130 feet in length. The ceiling is carved, varnished green, and loaded with gilt dragons, covered with coarse carpets, after the Turkish manner; but the walls have no kind of ornament, neither tapestry, lustres, nor paintings. The throne, which is in the middle of the hall, consists of a pretty high alcove, exceedingly neat. It has no inscription but the character Ching, which signifies holy, perfect, excellent.

Pelew Islands, or Palaos, cluster of islands in the western part of the Pacific ocean, situated between the Philippine islands, and the Caroline islands. They are about 18 in number; the names of some of the principal are Oroolong, Emungs, Emillegue, Artingal, Coroorda, and Pelelew. In the year 1783, Capt. Wilson, commander of the Antelope packet, in the service of the East-India Company, was wrecked on this coast. These islands were probably first noticed by some of the Spaniards of the Philippines, and by them named the Palaos Islands, from the tall palm-trees, which grow here in great abundance.

The inhabitants had been represented as inhuman and savage, and feeding on human flesh: captain Wilson, on the contrary, found them hospitable, friendly, and humane. These islands are long, but narrow; of a moderate height, well covered with wood, at least, such of the islands as Capt. Wilson's people had an opportunity of seeing. They are circled on the W. side by a reef of coral. The country produces some sugar-canes, and great abundance of the bamboo; likewise the tumeric, which the natives use as a dye, and with which the women stain their skin. None of the islands which the English visited, had any kind of grain; nor any quadruped whatever, except some brownish grey rats which ran wild in the woods, and three or four meager cats, which were seen in some houses at Pelew. The islands, when viewed from the sea, exhibit high, rugged land, well covered with wood; the interior part is in many places mountainous, but the valleys are extensive and beautiful, spreading before the eye many delicious prospects. The soil is, in general, rich. Lon. between 134. 5. & 134. 40. E. Lat. between 6. 54. & 8. 12. N.

Towns. There are 3 incorporated cities in this state, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, and Lancaster. Harrisburg is the seat of government. The other most considerable towns are Reading, Easton, Bethlehem, Carlisle, York, Germantown, Chambersburg, Columbia, Sunbury, Brownsville, Washington, &c.

Education. There is a university in Philadelphia, and colleges have been established at Carlisle, Canonsburg, Washington, and Meadville. There are respectable and flourishing Moravian schools at Bethlehem, Nazareth, & Litiz; and provision has been made by the legislature for establishing an academy in every county.

Religion. The congregations of the different denominations of Christians in Pennsylvania, were stated, in 1816, to be in the following proportions.—Presbyterians 186; German Calvinists 94, German Lutherans 74; Friends 55; Episcopalians 26; Baptists 15; Roman Catholics 14; Scotch Presbyterians 8; Universalists 1; Covenanters 2; Methodists, many; and 2 Jews' Synagogues; amounting in all to about 500 religious societies. Some of these numbers are doubtless stated too low. From a statement made by the society of Friends, it appears that they have 97 meetings in this state; and according to the Baptist report, the number of Baptist churches is 60.

Inhabitants. The inhabitants are principally descendants of the Welch, English, Irish, Germans, and some Scotch, French, Swedes, and a few Dutch. The Germans are numerous; they consist of Lutherans, Calvinists, Moravians, Catholics, Mennonists, &c.; and are distinguished for temperance, industry, and economy. The Swedish language is almost extinct, but the German prevails to a very considerable extent. There were published, in 1818, in Pennsylvania, 84 newspapers, of which 15 were in German.

Government. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives. The representatives, whose number cannot be less than 60 nor more than one hundred are chosen annually. The senators are chosen for 4 years, one quarter of them being elected every year. Their number cannot be less than one fourth, nor more than one third of the representatives. The governor is elected for 3 years by the people, but cannot hold the office more than 9 years in 12. The elections are made on the 2d Tuesday in October, and the legislature meets in December.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Delaware, Schuylkill, Lehigh, Susquehanna, Juniatta, Alleghany, Monongahela, Ohio, and Youghiogeny.

Face of the country. Pennsylvania is intersected by various mountains. The principal ridges of the Alleghany mountains, comprehended in Pennsylvania, are the Kittatinny, or the Blue mountains. Behind these and nearly parallel to them, are Peter's, Tuscarora, and Nescopeck mountains, on the E. side of the Susquehanna; on the W., Sherman's hill, Side-ling hill, Ragged, Great, Warrior's, Evit's and Will's mountains; then the great Alleghany ridge, which being the largest, gives name to the whole; and W. of this are the Chesnut ridges. Between the Juniatta and the W. branch of the Susquehanna, are Jacks, Tussys, Nittiny, and Bald Eagle mountains. The valleys between these mountains are often of a rich, black soil, suited to the various kinds of grass and grain. Some of the mountains admit of cultivation almost to their summits. The other parts of the state are generally level, or agreeably diversified with hills and valleys.

Soil and productions. The soil of Pennsylvania is various; a small part of it is barren, but a great proportion of it fertile, and a considerable part very excellent. It is generally better adapted to tillage than grazing; and much of it, particularly the southeast part, is under excellent cultivation. The two best tracts of land are one in the SE. part, along the Susquehanna, the other in the NW. part, between lake Erie and the Alleghany river. Wheat is the most important article of produce. The next in value is Indian corn. Buck wheat, rye, barley, oats, flax, hemp, beans, pease, and potatoes are extensively cultivated. Cherries, peaches, apples, and cider are abundant. There are large dairies in many parts. Pennsylvania has an excellent breed of horses. The number of domestic animals in the state, according to the returns of 1810, was as follows; horses 255,645; neat cattle 612,998; sheep 619,223. Of the sheep 4,128 were Merinos, and breeds mixed with Merinos.

Minerals. Iron ore is distributed in large quantities in many parts of the state; and in some places copper, lead, and alum are found. Here are also numerous limestone quarries, and various kinds of marble; and in the middle and western parts there is an abundance of coal.

Architecture. The general style of architecture in this state is neat and solid. Stone buildings are most common in old settlements; brick houses are frequent; log and frame houses abound in the new country. In the towns there is a considerable proportion of brick houses. Many turnpike roads of the most durable materials, and best construction are made in various parts of the state. That from Philadelphia to Lancaster is 62 miles in length, 24 feet wide, and covered 18 inches deep with powdered stone. Numerous bridges, of great strength and beauty, are constructed over the rivers.

Manufactures. Pennsylvania exceeds all the other states in the variety and extent of her manufactures, some of which are of superior excellence. In 1810 there were 64 cotton manufactories, 44 blast furnaces, 6 air furnaces, 4 bloomeries, 78 forges, 50 trip hammers, 18 rolling and slitting mills, 175 naileries, 64 paper mills, 8 glass works, 35 rope walks, and 108 printing offices. The total amount of the manufactures, embracing 220 articles, was $44,194,740. The exports in 1816, amounted to $7,196,246. They consist of flour, grain, iron, and various manufactured articles.

Penobscot, the largest river in Maine. The western and principal branch rises in the western part of the state, some of its sources being near the head waters of the Chaudiere, and others, near those of the St. John's. It flows E. by S. through Chesuncook and Pemmidumpkok lakes, and unites with the eastern branch, 54 m. in a right line, N. by E. Bangor. The eastern branch rises near the sources of the Aroostic. After the junction it holds a general course S. by W. till it flows into the head of Penobscot bay, between the towns of Penobscot and Prospect. It is navigable for ships to Bangor, where the navigation and tide terminate, 52 N. Owl's Head, at the entrance of the bay.—The towns on the west side of the river, and bay, beginning at the head of navigation, are Bangor, Hampden, Frankfort, Prospect, Belfast, Northport, Lincolnville, Camden, and Thomastown; on the east side, Brewer, Orlington, Bucksport, Orland, Penobscot, Castine, Sedgewick, and Deer Isle.

Penobscot Bay, large bay of the Atlantic, on S. coast of Maine. It embosoms Long Island, on which is the town of Islesborough, the Fox islands, containing the town of Vinalhaven, and several smaller islands. It is a very fine bay, affords great advantages of navigation, and presents a variety of beautiful landscapes. Its entrance, between the Isle of Holt and Owl's Head, is 18 miles wide, and its length from N. to S. is about 30. Lon. 68. 40. to 68. 56. W. Lat. 44. to 44. 30. N.

Pensacola, s-p. & chief town in West Florida, on the west side of Pensacola bay, 9 miles above fort Barancas at the entrance of the bay ; 55 E. by S. Mobile, 30 SSE. Claiborne, 145 S. Cahawba. Lon. 87. 12. W. Lat. 30. 28. N. Pop. in 1822, about 1,600 ; 1,100 French and Spanish, 500 Americans. The population is said to have once amounted to 5, or 6,000 ; but the town declined after it was taken from the English by the Spaniards in 1781 ; since it has come into the possession of the United States, it has begun to increase. It has a spacious Spanish church and some large houses of wood and brick, but they have generally an aspect of decay. It has a pleasant situation, on a dry sandy plain, elevated 18 or 20 feet above the level of the ocean, and has ever been remarkable for its salubrity. Its healthiness is attributed to the breeze from the bay, and the dryness of the air, there being no swamps in the vicinity. The harbour is very excellent, safe from all winds, having 21 feet water at the entrance, gradually deepening to 7 or 8 fathoms. The bay is 15 m. long, and from 3 to nearly 7 wide, and receives the waters of the Conecuh, Escambia, and Almirante rivers. It is completely land-locked and safe from all winds. This is the only commodious harbour for large ships, belonging to the United States in the gulf of Mexico.

Persepolis, or Elymais, ancient capital of the Persian empire; formerly a splendid city, of great extent; 30 NNE. Schiras. It was destroyed, according to some, by Alexander, and according to others, by the Arabs in the 7th century. Here are now to be seen vast and splendid ruins, supposed to be the remains of the great palace of Darius. Of this superb edifice, 3 sides are still standing; the front extending 600 paces from N. to S., and the side reaching to the mountain from E. to W. 390 paces. The exterior wall is about 24 feet high, composed of black stones, harder than marble, some of them finely polished, and many of them of prodigious size. There are ornaments of various descriptions, aqueducts, staircases, columns standing and lying, reservoirs of water, walls of buildings, &c. See Estachar.

Towns. Teheran is the present seat of government. Ispahan, the former seat of government, is the most celebrated city of modern Persia. Tauris and Schiraz, have heretofore been the capitals. Ruins of Susa, Persepolis, and Rai, ancient capitals of Persia, are now to be seen. The population of most of the considerable cities is now less than formerly. Most of the towns are surrounded by a high mud wall. The houses of ordinary persons are usually formed of mud, those of men of quality, of brick, but seldom of more than one story, with flat roofs.

Name. The most ancient name of Persia was Elam; it was also called Paras, Artax, Achæmenia, and Arsacia. The Persians call it Irân; it is also called by the orientals, Agjam & Shahistân.

Face of the country, soil, &c. Persia is bordered on the north-west by the Caucasian mountains, and the mountains of Armenia, and to the north-east are the Hindoo Koo, or part of the Himmaleh range; and the country is traversed with many ranges, either independent or connected with the frontier chains. The interior consists of an immense dry, salt plain. Two thirds of the whole country are composed of naked mountains, arid deserts, salt lakes, and marshes covered with jungle. On the western, northern, and eastern frontiers, are large rivers, but none of great magnitude traverse the country. The streams which descend from the mountains are usually lost in the sand, or formed into lakes. They produce, however, the most of the fertility which the country can boast, and where abundant, render the plains through which they flow, beautiful and luxuriant in a high degree. That of Schiraz is considered the boast of Persia, and almost of the east. The plain of Ispahan is only second to it. The provinces on the Caspian, watered by streams from the Caucasus, are of extraordinary fertility, but the air is humid and unhealthy. The centre and south are entirely destitute of trees; but gardens are cultivated with great care, and the fruits are excellent. The vine flourishes in several provinces, in a remarkable degree. The wine of Schiraz is considered superior to any other in Asia. The mulberry in the northern provinces is so abundant as to render silk the staple produce of the empire. Other productions are grain, rice, cotton, tobacco, indigo, senna, rhubarb, opium, saffron, manna, and assafœtida. The most considerable mineral production is salt. There are some mines of iron, copper, and silver; also turquoise stones: but the most extraordinary mineral production is naphtha, or bitumen, found in pits 3 feet in diameter, and 12 feet deep, which fill themselves after a certain period. It is an excellent substitute for pitch, and the bottoms of most of the vessels which navigate the Euphrates and Tigris, are covered with it.

Manufactures. The Persians are to a considerable extent a manufacturing people. The principal manufactures are beautiful carpets, shawls, silks, tapestry formed of silk and wool, embellished with gold; arms, sword blades, leather, paper, and porcelain.

Commerce. The foreign commerce of Persia is inconsiderable, and is chiefly in the hands of foreigners. Bushire is the principal port, the commerce of which is carried on mostly by Bassora. The main commercial intercourse with Persia is carried by caravans, with Turkey on one side, and Tartary and India on the other.

Religion. The Persians are Mahometans of the sect of the Sunnites or of the followers of Ali, and are on that ground viewed with greater abhorrence by the Turks than even Christians; but they are not themselves an intolerant people.

Government. The government is entirely absolute; the reigning king is regarded as the viceroy of the prophet, and is absolute master of the lives and property of his subjects.

Inhabitants. The Persians are accounted the most learned people of the east; and poetry and the sciences may be considered as their ruling passion. They are also the most polite of the oriental nations, and surpass all others in the skilful and profuse manner in which they administer flattery. They employ in conversation the most extravagantly hyperbolical language. Dissimulation is carried by them to the highest pitch; lying is never scrupled at, and their whole conduct is a train of fraud and artifice. Morality is much studied in Persia, though little practised.

Persiah, t. Hind. Baglana; 18 ESE. Basseen.

Persian Gulf, sea or inland lake, bounded N. by Persia, and elsewhere by Arabia, except at the E. extremity, where it communicates with the Arabian sea; about 500 miles from E. to W. and from 120 to 250 in breadth, from N. to S.; the principal river which runs into it is the Euphrates. The S. coast, in particular, is celebrated for its pearl fishery. Most part of the coasts, both on the N. and S. belong to colonies of Arabians.

Perth, city, Scot. capital of Perthshire, on the Tay; 10 S. Dunkeld, 22 W. Dundee, 39 N. Edinburgh by Kinghorn, 42 by Queensferry. Lon. 3. 27. W. Lat. 56. 22. N. Pop. 17,248. It is situated on an extensive low plain, under the Grampian hills, the scenery around it is very delightful and picturesque, and the approach to it is uncommonly beautiful. It is regular and well built, having 4 streets from E. to W., which are crossed by others at right angles from N. to S. It has 2 beautiful green meadows, called Inches, each of which is about 1 1-2 miles in circuit. It is a town of great antiquity, and has been the scene of many important transactions recorded in Scottish history. It contains various houses of public worship, a theatre, a celebrated grammar school, an academy, and a literary and antiquarian society with a library.

The staple manufacture is linen; but of late the cotton manufacture has almost superseded it. The linen and cotton goods manufactured annually, amount to about 200,000*l.* sterling. Besides these, there are extensive manufactures of leather, boots, shoes, and gloves, amounting to about 30,000*l.* The salmon fishery on the Tay near Perth, is very extensive, and the annual rent is estimated at about 7,000*l.* Native, Wm. Murray, Earl of Mansfield.

PERU, country, S. A., bounded N. by New Grenada, E. by the land of the Missions, Pampas del Sacramento, and Buenos Ayres, S. by Buenos Ayres, and W. by the Pacific ocean. Lat. 3. 30. to 21. S. Sq. leagues according to Humboldt 30,000; Bonycastle 33,630; Malte-Brun 60,172. Population stated in 1796, 1,445,000; more recently at 1,076,112; by Bonycastle at 1,300,000; 130,000 whites, 240,000 mestizoes, the remainder Indians and negroes; by the Patriots in 1818, at 1,700,000; by Malte-Brun and a Spanish journal in 1820, at 1,500,000.

Divisions. It is divided into 7 intendancies, Lima, Truxillo, Tarma, Guanica Velica, Guamanga, Arequipa, and Cusco. This is subdivided into 49 districts, and contains 1360 townships.

Towns. The principal towns are Lima, the capital, Cusco, Arequipa, Guamanga, Guanica Velica, Truxillo, Tarma. The principal ports are Arica, Ilo, Iquique, Quiha, Callao, Pisco, Chancay, Guacho, Guanchaco, Pacasmayo, Payta, &c.

Face of the country, soil, &c. It is divided into High and Low Peru, and is traversed by 2 chains of the Andes from N. to S. in nearly parallel directions. The one is the central chain of S. America, the other is called the cordillera of the coast. Between the latter and the shore lies the country of Low Peru, forming an inclined plain, from 10 to 20 leagues in breadth, and consisting for the most part of sandy deserts, without vegetation or inhabitants. Rain in this part is unknown, and the only spots capable of cultivation are the banks of the rivers. The country between the two cordilleras, called High Peru, consists of barren mountains and rocks, interspersed with fertile and cultivated valleys. On these uplands vegetation flourishes, and to the height of 10,000 feet, the climate is temperate and mild; at the height of 14,000 commences the limit of perpetual snow. Peru labours under great natural disadvantages. It is but thinly peopled, and there is a total want of roads, bridges, and canals; and the only way of transporting goods is on the backs of mules. Cultivation is in a very backward state.

Rivers. Several of the head branches of the Amazon, as the Ucayale, Apurimac, Tunguragua, and Gallagua, rise in Peru.

Exports. The principal exports are gold, silver, brandy, wine, sugar, pimento, cinchona, or Jesuit's bark, salt, vicuna wool, coarse woollens, and some other trifling manufactures.

Mines. The mountains of Peru abound in metallic wealth. The mines of gold and silver are rich, and quicksilver abounds in several places; but these rich mines are very badly managed. The number of gold mines & washings is 70; of silver mines 680; of quicksilver 4; of copper 4; of lead 12. Cobalt, antimony, salt, coal, emeralds, and other precious stones are found. The coinage of gold and silver at the mint of Lima, from 1791 to 1801, was 1,113,000*l.* per annum. Some of the principal mines are those of Lauricocha, or Pasco, Fuentestiana, Comolache, Pampa de Navar, Gualgayoc, Huantajaya, Pataz, and Huillies.

Inhabitants. The inhabitants consist of European Spaniards, Spanish creoles, Indians, mestizoes, negroes, mulattoes, and Samboes. The Indians are much the most numerous class. The European Spaniards are generally persons in the civil, military, and ecclesiastical departments of state, or mere adventurers.—The Peruvian ladies of the higher ranks, dress in a very splendid manner, and cover themselves with jewels; every lady, according to Pazos, wearing generally to the value of 2,000*l.* in rings, pearls, necklaces, combs studded with brilliants, and rosaries of pearls and diamonds.

History. This country was conquered by the Spaniards under Pizarro and Amalgro, about the year 1532. It was then governed by the inca Manco Capac, whose capital was Cusco. The Peruvians had advanced to considerable degree of civilization. The country is now much smaller than when under the incas. In 1718, Quito on the north as far as the river Tumbez, was annexed to New Grenada; and in 1773, Potosi and other rich districts on the south-east were annexed to Buenos Ayres. Since the conquest Peru has been a viceroyalty of Spain; and till lately has been the most tranquil of the Spanish American provinces. In 1821, Aug. 3, an independent provisional government was established, uniting the supreme power, political and military, in the person of Jose San Martin, as protector.

Perugia, delegation or pr. Italy, in the States of the Church, including the ci-devant Perugia; watered by the Tiber and the lake of Perugia. Pop. 131,542.

Perugia, (an. Perusia,) city, Italy, capital of a delegation in the States of the Church; 27 NNW. Spoleto, 60 SE. Florence, 72 N. Rome. Lon. 12. 17. E. Lat. 43. 6. N. Pop. 16,000. Bp. see. It stands on the summit of a hill near the Tiber, having a most delightful situation. It is tolerably well built, and contains 45 chh. and 48 convents, which are by no means elegant; several hospitals, and a university on a small scale. It has manufactures of velvet and silk stuffs, and considerable traffic in corn, cattle, wool, silk, oil, and brandy. The surrounding country is very rich. The citadel was built by pope Paul III.

Pest, or Pesth, palatinate, Hungary, composed of 3 counties, Pest, Pilish, or Pilis, and Solt. Pilis lies on the west side, and the others on the east side of the Danube. Pop. 361,733. Sq. m. 4,050. It is the best peopled part of Hungary, and contains the cities of Pest and Buda.

Pest, (an. Transacincum,) city, Hungary, on the Danube, opposite to Buda, with which it is connected by a bridge of boats 3-4 mile long ; 90 ESE. Presburg, 113 ESE. Vienna. Lon. 19. 14. E. Lat. 47. 32. N. Pop. 41,882. H. 2,919. Buda is the residence of the viceroy, & accounted the capital of Hungary, yet Pest is the seat of the high courts of justice, and the place of meeting for the diet. It is situated on a plain ; the streets are tolerably spacious, and regular, and the houses substantial, but not elegant. It contains 4 Cath. chh., 1 Luth., 1 Ref., 1 Greek ; 13 convents, 3 hospitals, a university, a gymnasium, a public library, and a royal museum. The university was transferred hither from Buda in 1784, and is the only one in Hungary. It has 4 faculties, and is richly endowed, having a library of 50,000 vols., a botanic garden, an observatory, &c. The number of regular professors is 40 ; and the number of students, in 1817, was 777 ; and in the gymnasium 701. The lectures in the university are generally given in Latin. Pest is the most populous and most commercial town in Hungary. The Danube affords means of intercourse with a considerable tract of country. There are 4 annual fairs, which are numerous attended. The manufactures, though not extensive, are various, comprising silk, cotton, leather, jewellery, musical instruments, and tobacco. Many of the inhabitants are of the genteel class.

Petersburg, bor. & port of entry, Dinwiddie co. Va., on S. bank of the Appomattox, just below the falls, 12 miles above its junction with James river, at City Point; 25 S. by E. Richmond, W. 146. Lon. 77. 31. W. Lat. 37. 18. N. Pop. in 1810, 5,668; in 1820, 6,690; whites 3,117; slaves 2,098. It contains a court house, a jail, a masonic hall, 2 banks, 1 insurance office, an academy, which had, in 1818, upwards of 100 students; 12 or 14 tobacco warehouses, 8 flour mills, and 5 houses of public worship, 1 for Presbyterians, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Methodists, and 2 for Baptists. It is one of the handsomest and most commercial towns in the state, and has a large trade in tobacco and flour. The shipping owned here, in 1816, amounted to 5,754 tons. The Appomattox is navigable as far as the town for vessels carrying 100 tons.

The borough contains, besides the town of Petersburg, the village of Blandford in Prince George co., and Pocahontas in Chesterfield co. The central part of the town is situated rather low, and it was formerly accounted unhealthy, but for several years past, since the marshes have been filled up, it has been among the most healthy towns in Virginia. The town is well supplied with good water. It is favourably situated at the head of navigation, and at the falls of the river, which afford advantages for extensive mills. See Blandford. On the 10th July, 1815, about 400 buildings were consumed in this town by fire; damage estimated at $2,000,000. That part which was burnt has since been handsomely rebuilt with brick houses, of 3 stories.

Petersburg, or St. Petersburg, gov. Russia, bounded N. by the gulf of Finland, the country of Finland, lake Ladoga, and the gov. of Olonetz, E. by Novgorod, S. by Pskov, and W. by lakes Pskov and Tchudskoe, the gov. of Revel, and the gulf of Finland. Pop. in 1817, 698,000. Sq. m. 17,995. The surface is generally level; the climate cold, and unfavourable to the culture of corn; the population thin; almost 2-3ds of the country covered with wood, marshes, and lakes; timber the chief article of export. Rivers, Neva, Narva, Luga, and Volchov; lakes, Ladoga, Tchudskoe, and Pskov.

Petersburg, or St. Petersburg, city, Russia, capital of the empire, and of the government of the same name, situated at the east extremity of the gulf of Finland, at the mouth of the river Neva; 400 E. by N. Stockholm, 530 NNE. Warsaw, 1,140 ENE. London. Lon. 30. 19. E. Lat. 59. 56. N. Pop. in 1817, 285,500, of whom 55,000 were connected with the land and sea service, and 25,000 were foreigners. Abp. see.

This city was founded by Peter the Great. Previous to 1703 the spot on which it is built contained only two huts. Its form is nearly circular; the diameter being 4 miles, and the Neva flows through it from E. to W. It is built partly on the continent, and partly on a small island formed by branches of the Neva. This river is broader here than the Thames in London; deep, rapid, with water as clear as crystal. There are 2 bridges over the stream, and 3 over the branches. The site is completely level, and so low, that high tides accompanied with westerly winds, sometimes occasion inundations; and it is difficult to make cellars, as water is found in all situations at the depth of 5 or 6 feet. The land side is almost entirely open, but the approach by sea is guarded by the fort of Cronstadt, and in the middle of the city is a citadel. The city is subdivided for purposes of police into 10 districts, but has also 4 more comprehensive divisions, of which the most noted is called the Admiralty or central quarter, combining a large portion of the fashion and business of the city.

St. Petersburg possesses more than any other great European city the advantage of modern taste in its outline & structure; and in the width and regularity of its streets, and the general elegance of its buildings it surpasses every other city in Europe. The streets are generally paved with stone, and from the admiralty quarter 3 extend fully 2 miles in length, each perfectly straight. In the admiralty quarter are 4 squares, and to the east in a central situation is an extensive public garden, with beautiful alleys.—The houses are generally of brick, and stuccoed, so as to have the appearance of stone.

Among the public buildings are the winter palace of the emperor, an edifice of great extent, 450 long, 350 broad, and 70 high; the Hermitage, a palace containing a valuable collection of paintings, books, and natural history, also public rooms, &c.; the marble palace, an elegant structure; the Taurida, another palace belonging to the crown, containing extensive galleries and fine gardens, but now used for barracks; a wooden palace belonging to the grand duke Constantine; the imperial academy, academy of fine arts, the senate house, post office, office for foreign affairs, medical college, several hospitals, 60 Greek chh., 7 Luth., 4 Ref., 1 Armenian, and 1 mosque. The university was founded in 1819. The imperial library contains upwards of 300,000 volumes, and 13,000 MSS.; that at the Hermitage 60,000; and that of the academy of medicine and surgery 20,000. There are 3 theatres, a German, a French, and a Russian; the actors are all paid by government, not depending at all on their audiences. The number of booksellers' shops is between 30 and 40; of printing-houses, about half as many. Their publications consist mostly of translations from the French, English, or German. The members of the literary associations are mostly foreigners, particularly Germans.

The climate is severe, even beyond what is common in Europe, in the latitude of 60°. The earth is covered with snow from the middle or end of Oct. and the cold continues without interruption till about the middle of April, and about the end of that month the ice in the Neva breaks up. The summer is short, but hot; the spring and autumn disagreeable and unhealthy, subject to heavy rains accompanied with thick fogs, and an atmosphere loaded with vapours.—The inhabitants are distinguished for hospitality, but are much addicted to gaming, and among the lower ranks drinking is prevalent.—The police is altogether military, and order is effectually preserved in the streets.

The custom house business is transacted partly at Cronstadt, 20 miles distant. The shoals between Cronstadt and St. Petersburg are such as to require all vessels to be lightened, that draw more than 7 feet of water. The commercial intercourse of the city is extensive, being the only great maritime outlet in the gulf of Finland, and having, by means of a canal which connects the Neva with the Volga, a communication with the Caspian sea, a distance of 1,400 miles. The exports consist of hemp, flax, leather, tallow, iron, furs, canvas, &c.; the imports, sugar, coffee, cotton, indigo, dyewoods, spices, and various manufactures. The total value of the annual exports is stated at between 4 and 5,000,000*l.* sterling; imports between 5, and 6,000,000*l.*; the imports being somewhat greater, and the exports somewhat less than half of the whole foreign trade of Russia. The number of ships that annually enter the Neva is from 1,000 to 1,700. In 1820 the exports amounted to 105,095,290 roubles; the imports to 190,388,897 roubles; vessels entering 1,090; leaving 1,070. The foreign trade is almost wholly in the hands of foreigners, the Russians having neither capital nor knowledge for such business.

ly straight from N. to S., 3 1-2 miles, on an elevated tract of land, and is lined on each side by fertile and well cultivated fields, extensive orchards as well as ornamental trees, and handsome dwelling houses, and it affords an extensive, variegated, and delightful prospect. The town is well watered by Swift river and other streams, and contains a Congregational meeting, a cotton manufactory, 4 tanneries, 3 trip hammers, 2 carding machines, 2 clothier's works, 5 retail stores, and manufactures considerable quantities of straw bonnets and hats. A well recently sunk near the centre of the town is strongly impregnated with mineral substances.

Philadelphia, co. Pa., bounded N. by Bucks co., SE. by Delaware river, SW. by Delaware co., W. & NW. by Montgomery co. Pop. in 1810, 111,210; in 1820, 137,097.

Philadelphia, city, & port of entry, Pennsylvania, in a county of the same name, on W. bank of the Delaware; 90 SW. New-York, 100 NE. Baltimore, 300 SW. Boston, W. 137. Lon. 75. 10. W. Lat. 39. 57. N. Pop. of the city and liberties, in 1790, 43,525; in 1802, 62,000; in 1810, 92,247; in 1820, 108,116. In 1810, there were, within the city and suburbs, 22,764 buildings, of all kinds, for residence, business, worship, &c.

It is 126 miles from the Atlantic, by the course of the river and bay, and is situated on the narrowest part of an isthmus between the Delaware and the Schuylkill rivers, about 6 miles above their confluence. The situation is very pleasant and healthy. It was originally laid out by William Penn, in 1683. The ground plot of the city, distinct from the liberties, is an oblong, about 1 mile from N. to S., and 2 from E. to W. But the buildings now occupy a space upwards of 3 miles long, from N. to S., and they extend from the Delaware to the Schuylkill. There were originally 9 streets extending from one river to the other, which were intersected at right angles by 23 running north and south. The number of squares in the original plan, was 184, but as several of these have been intersected by new streets, their number now amounts to 304; and several of these are again intersected by lanes and alleys. Broad street is 113 feet wide; High or Market street, 100; Mulberry street 60; and the other streets, in the original plan, 50 feet wide. The greatest part of the city is well paved with stones in the middle, with neat side walks of brick; furnished with common sewers and gutters, so that the streets are in general kept very clean.

The public buildings are the late state house and offices, 2 city court houses, a county house, a state penitentiary, a bridewell or jail, a university, the Philosophical Society's hall, the hall for the Academy of Natural Sciences, the Washington hall, a public library, a hospital, the Friends' alms-house, 3 dispensaries, an alms-house, 2 dramatic theatres, a medical theatre, a laboratory, an amphitheatre, a masonic hall, a large custom-house, a new banking house for the U. S. bank, 10 incorporated banks, and 59 houses of public worship, 9 for General Assembly Presbyterians, 2 for Associate Reformed Presbyterians, 2 for Dutch Reformed Presbyterians, 2 for Reformed Presbyterians, 1 for Associate Presbyterians, 1 for German Presbyterians, 11 for Methodists, 6 for Episcopalians, 6 for Friends, 5 for Baptists, 4 for Roman Catholics, 2 for German Lutherans, 1 for English Lutherans, 1 for Swedes, 1 for Moravians, 1 for Universalists, 1 for Unitarians, 1 for Dunkers, a New Jerusalem church, and a Jews' synagogue.

Several of the churches are very spacious and elegant edifices. Each of the Episcopal, the German, and 2 of the Roman Catholic churches are furnished with organs. The state house was erected in 1753, and its architecture is much admired. The declaration of the American Independence was adopted and signed in this building. The apartments in the lower story are appropriated to the holding of the courts; the upper story is used as a museum, and contains the largest collection of curiosities in America. Adjoining to it is an enclosed square, which is ornamented with rows of trees, and forms a pleasant public walk. In the plot of the city, are 4 squares reserved by the founder, used for the recreation of the inhabitants; the two easternmost are very elegant. The Bank of Pennsylvania, is a remarkably elegant edifice of marble. The houses of the city are generally constructed of brick, without much ornament, but have a striking appearance of convenience, comfort, neatness, and opulence.

The city contains 7 different markets, the principal of which is in Market, or High street, and extends from the Delaware through 8 squares. The market houses are well supplied with various provisions, which are exposed to sale daily, and most abundantly every Wednesday and Saturday. The United States bank is in this city; and here is the mint of the U. S., in which the national money is coined.

Philadelphia exceeds all other towns in the U. S., in the variety, extent, and excellence of its manufactures. In 1810, the city and county contained 8 cotton manufactories, 20 nail manufactories, 18 distilleries, 17 breweries, 59 tanneries, 7 paper mills, 15 rope walks, 3 glass works, 14 marble yards, 54 printing offices, and numerous other manufacturing establishments. The total amount of the manufactures of the city and county, in 1810, was valued at 16,103,869 dollars. Printing is carried on here more extensively than in any other place in America. There are 9 daily newspapers, 2 semi-weekly, and 4 weekly. This city is celebrated for its excellent porter brewery.

Philadelphia is a place of great opulence, and its trade is extensive and flourishing. Turnpike roads of the best construction, diverge from it in various directions. Over the Delaware, Schuylkill, and Susquehanna, in the approaches to the city, there are 10 excellent bridges. The Delaware is navigable to this place for a 74 gun ship, and for sloops to Trenton. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1816, amounted to 101,830 tons; in 1821, to 83,225 tons. The environs of the city are pleasant and well cultivated.

The literary and benevolent institutions are numerous, and highly honourable to the inhabitants. The Philadelphia library originated with Dr. Franklin, and was incorporated in 1742. The building belonging to the library company, is an elegant edifice, and in its front is a statue of Dr. Franklin, of white marble. It contains a museum, a philosophical apparatus, the Philadelphia library, & the Loganian library, which, together, have about 22,000 volumes. The American Philosophical Society was established here in 1769, and has a library of 4,000 volumes. The Philadelphia Society for promoting Agriculture was instituted in 1785, and has a small library, a cabinet of minerals, and a repository of agricultural implements. The Athenæum of Philadelphia was incorporated in 1815, and has a library of 2,000 volumes, a cabinet of minerals and medals, and upon its tables are to be found the principal newspapers published in the U. S., and a numerous collection of the American and European magazines. The Academy of Natural Sciences was founded in 1812, and incorporated in 1817, and has a library of 2,000 volumes, and handsome collections on natural history. The library of the Society of Friends, contains about 2,000 volumes. The oldest seminary of learning in Pennsylvania, is that incorporated by William Penn, by the title of Friends Public Schools. This corporation has considerable funds, and supports a number of schools; and under its direction the Latin and Greek Languages, the mathematics, and natural and experimental philosophy are taught. The astronomical observatory in the city belongs to this institution, and it likewise possesses an extensive philosophical apparatus. Here are 13 Lancasterian schools, containing nearly 5,000 children; also the Pennsylvania institution for the deaf and dumb.

The Pennsylvania Hospital was established in 1752, and is the most respectable institution of the kind in the Union. The whole extent of the building from E. to W. is 278 feet, and detached from the hospital is another building of 3 stories, calculated to accommodate 40 or 50 patients. The number of patients is usually from 190 to 220; including 90 lunatics. There are belonging to the hospital a valuable anatomical museum, & a library of about 4,500 volumes. In 1817, a handsome building was erected for the accommodation of the celebrated painting of Mr. West, representing Christ healing the sick. This painting is a source of a handsome income to the hospital.

The University of Pennsylvania was erected into a university, upon the foundation of what was denominated the Academy and Charity School, and it is chartered as a complete university. The board of trustees, who are 24 in number, have the power of appointing professors in all the branches of science. The establishment consists at present of 4 departments, of arts, medicine, natural science, and law, in each of which lectures are given, and a system of instruction is established. Connected with the university are the academy, in which youth are instructed in the learned languages, preparatory to college, and a charity school for the education of poor children.

A large edifice, built for the accommodation of the president of the United States, is occupied by the university. The building devoted to the faculty of arts has excellent lecture rooms, and a large hall, for public exercises. The apparatus belonging to the college, is said not to be surpassed by any other of the kind in the country. The library contains 3, or 4,000 volumes. The offices in the department of arts are a provost, who is also a professor of moral philosophy and belles lettres, a vice provost, who is also a professor of mathematics and natural philosophy, and a professor of languages. The number of undergraduates is about 40. The course of collegiate education is completed in 3 years.

In the department of natural science there are 6 professors, 1 of natural history, 1 of comparative anatomy, 1 of chemistry as applied to the arts, geology, and mineralogy, 1 of natural philosophy, 1 of botany, and 1 of general literature.—In the department of Law there is one professor.

The Medical Department is the most distinguished and flourishing institution of the kind in America. It has 7 professors, one of the theory and practice of medicine, one of surgery, one of materia medica, one of anatomy, one of obstetrics, and one of chemistry; and, in 1821, about 400 students. The lectures commence the 1st week in October, and end the last week in March or the 1st in April. Every student pays to each professor $20 for a course of lectures. It is necessary to attend two full courses in order to be admitted to a degree.

Pico, one of the Azores, so called from a very high mountain, terminating, like Teneriffe, in a peak.

The mountain Pico, which gives name to the island, is filled with dismal dark caverns or volcanoes, which frequently vomit out flames, smoke, and ashes to a great distance, and stated from observations made on board British vessels at 9,000 feet above the level of the sea. It is generally capped with snow, and has been seen at the distance of 80 miles. At the foot of this mountain, toward the E., is a spring of fresh water, generally cold, but sometimes so heated with the subterraneous fire as to rush forth in torrents, with a kind of ebullition like boiling water, equalling that in heat, and sending forth a stream of sulphureous foetid vapours, liquified stones, minerals, and flakes of earth all on fire.

The length is about 20 miles long, and 3 broad. Pop. 21,861. The island is composed of lava, so destitute of soil that earth is transported across the channel, and laid upon the lava. With a thin covering of soil the vines grow luxuriantly. Its most remarkable places are Lagená, Pico, Lagoas, Santa Cruze, or Cruz, San Sebastian, Pesquin, San Rocko, Playa, and Magdalena ; the inhabitants of which live wholly on the produce of the island, in great plenty and comfort. The cattle are various, numerous, and excellent in their several kinds ; it is the same with the vine and its juices, prepared into different wines, the best in the Azores. Lon. 28.26. W. Lat. 38.30. Piedmont, principal province of the continental states of the king of Sardinia, forming the NW. portion of Italy, bounded N. by the Valais, E. by Lombardy, S. by Genoa and the Mediterranean, and W. by France and Savoy. Pop. 1,750,000, all Catholics, except 20,000 Waldenses. Sq. m. 7,816. The duchy of Monferrat is often considered as a part of Piedmont, and contains 186,000 inh., and 896 sq. m.; the Sardinian Milanese is also attached to Piedmont, containing 556,000 inh. and 3,279 sq. m. The whole is now divided into 26 districts, viz. Aosta, Nice, Sospel, Oneglia, Mondovi, Alba, Asti, Cuneo, Pinerolo, Susa, Saluzzo, Turin, Ivrea, Biella, Vercelli, Acqui, Casale, Alexandria, Mortara, Tortona, Voghera, Vigevano, Novara, Pallenza, Domo d'Ossola, and Sesia.

It is a part of ancient Cisalpine Gaul ; bordered on the N. W. and S. sides by mountains, but the central part is composed of beautiful plains ; and the country received its present name from its situation at the foot of the mountains. It is watered by the Po, the two Dorias, Stura, Orco, Sesia, Tanaro, Borbio, Balba, Bormida, and Varo. The climate in the mountainous parts is much colder than in the plains. The soil in all parts is generally very fertile ;

the plains yielding wheat, rye, barley, and an abundance of rice about Sesia; the hilly country abounds in vines, but of inferior quality; olives, almonds, chestnuts, some figs, oranges, and lemons. The pastures are rich and the cattle numerous; silk is a very important article, and is raised in great quantities. The country is rich also in mineral productions. The exports consist of silk, cattle, wine, fruit, hides, wool, and butter. The Piedmontese are an industrious but ignorant people; and the arts of civilized life are here very backward.

Pisa, (an. Pisæ,) city, Tuscany, capital of a province of the same name, on the Arno; 13 N. by E. Leghorn, 42 W. Florence. Lon. 10. 24. E. Lat. 43. 43. N. Pop. 17,000. H. 3,500. Abp. see. It stands on both sides of the river, 8 miles above its mouth, in an extensive plain, and is about 6 miles in circuit. The streets are generally broad and well paved, but the extent of the town, the want of trade, and the decayed state of some of the public buildings, give Pisa a dull and deserted appearance.

The cathedral with its attendant buildings, is said to be the finest specimen existing of the Gothico Moresco style. The belfry is a cylindrical tower, built in 1174, of 188 feet in height, graceful in its proportions, & constructed of successive rows of pillars, chiefly marble, but remarkable above all for its inclination of about 15 feet out of the perpendicular, whence it is commonly called the leaning tower. This architectural phenomenon is ascribed by some to design, by others to the sinking of a part of the soil on which the edifice stands. There are said to be 30 chh. and convents.—The university, founded in 1339, consists of 4 colleges, and has a library of 40,000 vols., a botanic garden, a cabinet of natural history, and an observatory. The number of acting professors, in 1819, was 30; of students 473.

Pisa is a town of great antiquity; and in the 10th and 11th centuries, took the lead of the commercial towns of Italy. The population is said to have amounted to 100,000 or 150,000. In the 13th century it was exceeded by Genoa; and now Leghorn absorbs the foreign trade of this part of Italy.—Natives Galileo and Alghorotti.—Pop. of the province 346,474. Sq. m. 1,943.

Pitcairn's Island, isl. in S. Pacific ocean. Lon. 133. 00. W. Lat. 25. 20. S. It is 6 miles long, and 3 broad, covered with wood, of a very fertile soil, and fine climate, but having neither river nor harbour. This island was settled, in 1789, by 9 Englishmen, mutineers of the English ship Bounty, each having taken a wife, with 2 other females, and 6 males, natives of Otaheite ; in all 26 persons. After a few years the tyrannical behaviour of the Englishmen towards the Otaheitans, was such as to induce the latter to attempt to destroy the whites altogether. Having killed all but 3, who concealed themselves, they afterwards quarrelled among themselves, and the result was that all were killed or died of wounds. Of the three English two soon after died, one only, John Adams, whose original name is supposed to be Alexander Smith, survived to be the father and protector of the children descended from his shipmates.—This island was first visited, in 1808, by captain Folger of Boston ; in 1814, by the British frigates Briton and Tagus ; in 1817, by captain Reynolds of the ship Sultan, of Boston ; in 1819, by captain Henderson of the English ship Herculus ; and in March 1822, by capt. Archer of New Bedford.—By the visitors, in 1814, the inhabitants were thus described.

“This interesting new colony now consisted of about 46 persons, mostly grown up young people, besides a number of infants. The young men, all born in the island, were very athletic, and of the finest forms, their countenances open and pleasing, indicating much benevolence and goodness of heart ; and the young women were objects of particular admiration, tall, robust, and beautifully formed, their faces beaming with smiles and unruffled good humour, but wearing a degree of modesty and bashfulness that would do honour to the most virtuous nation on earth ; and all of them, both male and female, had the most marked English features. Their native modesty assisted by a proper sense of religion and morality, instilled into their youthful minds by John Adams, the leader of the colony, has hitherto preserved these interesting people perfectly chaste. The greatest harmony prevails among them. But what was most gratifying to the visitors, was the simple and unaffected manner in which they returned thanks to the Almighty for the many blessings they enjoyed. Their habitations are extremely neat ; and the village of Pitcairn forms a pretty square.”

Similar to the above is the account of the first officer of the Sultan. “The conduct of the natives while on board was such as to excite the admiration of every person, and I believe I may with safety declare that for morals, politeness of behaviour, an open and undisguised manner of conveying their sentiments on all occasions, with a strict adherence to truth and the principles of religion, there are not their equals to be found on earth.—They live together in the greatest amity and brotherly love.—The oldest native is about 25 or 26 years of age. The village is delightfully situated, consisting of 6 dwelling houses, out houses, &c. The principal produce of the island consists of yams, tarro, bread fruit, cocoa nuts, bananas, sugar cane, and the tea root, all originally found on the island ; hogs, goats, fowls, and cats were brought in the ship.” The number living, in 1822, was 53, including John Adams and 6 Otaheitan women ; the rest born on the island.

It is situated on a beautiful plain, on a broad point of land, where the confluence of the Alleghany and Monongahela forms the Ohio. This place was once in the hands of the French and then called Fort du Quesne, afterwards Fort Pitt, and was commenced as a town under the name of Pittsburg in 1760. It is a very flourishing manufacturing and commercial town, and has an extensive trade. It contains a court house, a jail, a national armoury and magazine, an academy, a library of about 2,000 volumes, 4 banks, including a branch of the U. S. bank, and 8 houses of public worship. The plat of ground on which the town is built, is nearly in the form of a triangle, and is now almost filled with houses. A suburb has been laid out on the Alleghany, called the northern liberties, and another on the Monongahela. There are 4 other villages which are virtually suburbs of Pittsburg, Birmingham on the left bank of the Monongahela; Alleghany upon the second bank of Alleghany river, opposite to the city; Lawrenceville 2 miles above Pittsburg on the Alleghany; and a street running along the left bank of the Monongahela, opposite to Pittsburg.

Pittsburg is a place of great domestic and foreign commerce. The waggons that have passed to and from the town, counted at the nearest turnpike gate, have amounted, in one year, to 11,800. The surrounding country is one great bed of fossil coal, and the hills in sight of the town are full of that mineral. The region also abounds in iron ore, and various mineral and vegetable productions. In 1816, there were in this town and its connected vicinity, 8 steam mills, 5 green and white glass houses, in which every kind of glass, from a porter bottle or window glass to very elegant cut crystal glass, is manufactured; 4 air furnaces, 3 breweries, in which are made immense quantities of beer, porter, and ale; 67 flour mills, and numerous other mills and manufactories. With regard to manufactures Pittsburg is the first town in the western country.

Travellers are almost always disappointed on entering this city; there is but one point of approach which affords a good view of the place; that is the summit of a hill in the road from Washington, Pa. Except from the gratifying reflection excited from the appearance of so much industry, Pittsburg is by no means a pleasant place to a stranger. The constant volumes of smoke fill the atmosphere with coal dust, and the whole town has a smoky appearance. The houses are mostly of brick, and generally large. The streets intersect each other at right angles, but are narrow. In Oct. 1815, it was calculated that 2,000 bushels of coal were consumed daily on a space 2 1-4 miles square. Three newspapers are published here. Vessels of 200 or 300 tons at some seasons descend the Ohio from Pittsburg; the distance from this place to New-Orleans by the course of the rivers is about 2,000 miles.

It is watered by the Housatonic, and is a very pleasant, handsome, and flourishing town, and has considerable trade and manufactures. It contains 3 houses of public worship, 2 for Congregationalists, and 1 for Methodists, a bank, a town-house, a female academy, a printing office from which is issued a weekly newspaper, 3 woollen manufactories, a marble manufactory, a manufactory of small arms, employing about 40 workmen, and a drum manufactory. Large numbers of chaises, coaches, and waggons are made here. Good marble is found in this and several of the neighbouring towns. The U. S. have barracks here sufficient to accommodate 2,000 men, and a hospital.—Pittsfield is situated in a very fertile tract of country, and is one of the best agricultural townships in the state.—A cattle show is held in this town annually about the first of October.

of a brick dried in the sun, or a kind of cane called quincas, and few of them have any story. The town contains some families of rank. The climate is hot and very dry, rain being seldom known here; notwithstanding which it is very healthy. It has a river of great advantage to the inhabitants, as well as to the adjacent country, the soil of which is sandy, and therefore penetrated with greater ease by the water, and the country being level, the water is easily conveyed to different parts, by canals. Piura has a hospital under the care of the Bethlehemites.

Plata, Rio de la, or River of Silver, originally called the River de Solis, r. S. America, one of the largest in the world. It is properly the continuation of the Paraguay, which rises about Lat. 13. S., and receives besides other rivers, the Pilcomayo and Vermeio, and in Lat. about 27. 30. S., is joined by the great river Parana, which robs the Paraguay of its name, and flowing southerly receives the Rio Salado and other rivers, and about Lat. 33. 40. S., it is joined by the Uruguay, and then the stream takes the name of La Plata, and expanding into a wide estuary, it communicates with the ocean about 250 miles below the junction of the Uruguay. It is 150 miles wide at its mouth, from Cape St. Maria on NE. side to Cape St. Anthony on the SW., and at Buenos Ayres, 200 miles above the mouth, the breadth is 30 miles. This wide expanse of water is rendered of dangerous navigation by rocks and sandbanks, and also by impetuous torrens. It is said to have formerly been navigable for large ships as high as Assumption, about 1,000 miles; but owing to accumulations of sand, this is now impracticable. The only port which affords complete safety for ships is Monte Video; though Maldonadon, Barragon, Buenos Ayres, and Colonia, afford different degrees of security and anchorage. See Paraguay and Parana.

Plata, (La,) or Chuquisaca, city, Buenos

Ayres, capital of a district. Lon. 66. 46. W. Lat. 19. 40. S. The inhabitants consist of Indians and Spaniards, and amount to about 14,000. It stands on a plain, environed by eminences, which defend it from all winds. The temperature of the air in summer is very mild; nor is there any considerable difference throughout the year. The houses have one story besides the ground floor; they are covered with tiles, and are very roomy and convenient, with delightful gardens planted with European fruit trees: but water is so scarce, that they have hardly enough to supply the necessary purposes of life; and the little they have is brought from the several public fountains dispersed in the different parts of the city.—The town has the name of La Plata from its being built near silver mines. Plata was erected into a bishopric in 1551, the place having then the title of city; and in 1608, was raised to an archbishopric. The cathedral is large, of good architecture, and finely adorned with paintings and gildings. The city has also a university, dedicated to St. Francis Xavier; the chairs of which are filled indifferently with secular clergy or laymen, but the rector was formerly always a Jesuit.

Plym, r. Eng. in Devonshire, which becomes navigable at Plymouth, and falls into Plymouth sound, a little below Plymouth.

Plymouth, formerly Saltash, p-t. Windsor co. Vt.; 18 W. Windsor, W. 460. Pop. 1,112. A remarkable cavern was discovered in this town in 1818. It is situated at the foot of a mountain, near the head of Black river, and has five apartments, the largest of which is 30 feet long, 20 broad, and 20 high. Two of the others are nearly as large. The rocks which form the cavern are wholly of limestone. Numerous petrifications are found here, most of which resemble icicles hanging from the rocks.

Plymouth, p-t. Grafton co. N.H., on W. side of the Merrimack; 31 SSE. Haverhill, 43 N. Concord, 70 NW. Portsmouth, W. 539. Pop. 983. In the N. part of the town there is a pleasant village containing a court-house, a Congregational meeting-house, and about 25 dwelling houses. The courts for the county are held alternately here and at Haverhill.

Plymouth, co. E. part of Mass., bounded N. by Norfolk co., E. by the Atlantic, S. by Barnstable co. and Buzzard's Bay, and W. by Bristol co. Pop. in 1810, 35,169; in 1820, 38,136.

Plymouth, s-p. & cap. Plymouth co. Mass.; 36 SSE. Boston, W. 454. Lon. 70. 30. W. Lat. 41. 58. N. Pop. in 1810, 4,228; in 1820, 4,348. It contains a court house, a jail, a bank, and 4 houses of public worship; 3 for Congregationalists, and 1 for Baptists. The harbour is spacious, but shallow. Vessels drawing more than 10 or 11 feet of water, must unload in part at a distance from the wharfs. The compact part of the town is pleasantly situated, & well built, chiefly of wood. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1821, amounted to 21,069 tons, and is employed in the fisheries, West India and European trade. A rivulet passes through the town which affords a valuable alewife fishery, and also furnishes seats for a number of mills and important manufactories, among which are considerable iron works, and cotton and woollen manufactories. A fort for the defence of the town and a light house are built 9 E. by N. of Plymouth.

The township is extensive, containing more than 80 square miles. It is 16 m. long, & more than 5 broad. The soil near the coast is generally good; the rest of the township is barren, and notwithstanding its antiquity, is still a forest, consisting mostly of pine, though there are some tracts covered with oak. More than two thirds of the inhabitants reside in the village. There is another village at Monument ponds, 7 S. the town.

Plymouth is the oldest town in New England. The first settlers, consisting of 101 Puritans, who fled from religious persecution in England, landed here on the 22d of December, 1620; this anniversary is still observed. The rock on which they landed, was conveyed, in 1774, to the centre of the town.

Plymouth, p-t. Chenango co. N.Y.; 7 NW. Norwich, 107 W. Albany, W. 415. Pop. 1,496.

Plymouth, p-t. Luzerne co. Pa., on the west branch of the Susquehanna, 3 miles below Wilkesbarre, 60 NW. Easton, 113 NNW. Philadelphia, 117 NE. Harrisburg, W. 214. Pop. 912. Here are valuable coal mines; about 1,500 tons of coal are annually conveyed in arks of from 50 to 70 tons down the Susquehanna to Columbia and Baltimore. Here is a very fertile tract of 1,100 acres originally found destitute of timber. The Indian name of this place was Shawnee, and was formerly the residence of that tribe. It suffered, in 1778, together with Wilkesbarre and Kingston, by the Wyoming massacre.

Plymouth, t. Montgomery co. Pa. Pop. 928.

Plymouth, s-p. & cap. Washington co. N.C., near the mouth of the Roanoke; 20 S. Edenton, W. 302. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1816, amounted to 1,505 tons.

Plymouth, t. Richland co. Ohio. Pop. 580.

Plymouth, s-p. Eng. in Devonshire; 43 SW. Exeter, 216 W. by S. London. Lon. 4. 7. W. Lat. 50. 23. N. Pop. including the Dock, 56,060. It is situated at the head of the capacious haven of Plymouth sound, which is formed by the rivers Plym and Tamar, at their confluence with the sea. It is one of the most important maritime places in the kingdom, on account of its docks and harbours; the harbour being one of the finest in the world, capable of containing 2,000 sail of shipping. The town of Plymouth stands at the mouth of the Plym, and 1 1-2 m. N. stands the Dock, or Plymouth Dock, a separate town, of recent origin, depending on the docks, nearly as large as Plymouth. Between Plymouth and the Dock, intervenes the populous town of Stonehouse, which connects the two together, forming almost a continued line of buildings. Plymouth is not remarkable for its elegance or neatness, but has of late been much improved. The streets are generally narrow, irregular, and ill paved. It contains some fine buildings, 21 charitable institutions, many of them important and well regulated; a public library, and the handsomest provincial theatre in England, constructed almost entirely of iron.

The harbour of Hamoaze at the mouth of the Tamar is well adapted for ships of war, and in time of peace a very considerable part of the English navy is here moored. Plymouth sound has been rendered secure by constructing a breakwater across its entrance. This is the greatest work of the kind ever undertaken in England. It was begun in 1812, and is not yet finished. The whole expense was estimated at 1,171,100*l.*: the quantity of stone required at 2,000,000 tons: the length about 1 mile. In 1816, upwards of 1,000,000 tons of stone had been deposited; the result thus far fully answering the expectations of the projectors. The dock yard is one of the finest in the world, including an area of 96 acres. The trade of Plymouth is considerable; and in time of war a vast business arises from the sale of prizes and their cargoes. It sends 2 members to parliament. Market on Monday, Thursday, and Saturday.

Plymouth, t. island of Tobago.

Plympton, p-t. Plymouth co. Mass.; 10 NW. Plymouth, 32 S. Boston, W. 455. Pop. 930. It contains a cotton manufactory, a cotton and woollen manufactory, and a forge.

Po, (an. Padus, Eridanus, & Bodincus.) r. Italy, which rises in Mount Viso, in NW. part of the marquisate of Saluzzo, 7 N. Château Dauphin; crosses a part of the marquisate of Saluzzo, the province of Chieri, the duchy of Montferrat, and holds an eastern course throughout the whole of Lombardy, separating Austrian Italy from Parma, Modena, and the States of the Church, and discharges itself into the gulf of Venice by a great number of mouths, 30 S. Venice. The length of its course, with its windings, is upwards of 500 miles, and receiving a great number of rivers, which rise from the mountains, it is subject to sudden increase, which would be destructive to the flat country, were it not for the dikes constructed on each side. Its current is so often rapid, that its navigation is at all seasons difficult, and though it passes by about 50 towns, but little advantage is derived from it for the conveyance of merchandise. Besides other towns it passes by Villa Franca, Polonghera, Carmagnola, Carignano, Moncalier, Turin, Chivasso, Verrua, Casal, Brema, Valencia, Borgo Franco, Piacenza, Cremona, Viadano, Borgo Forti, St. Benedetto, Ferrara, Ariano, Comachio, &c.

Pola, t. Istria, Aust. Illyria, upon a mountain, near a bay of the Adriatic; 30 S. Capo d'Istria, 44 S. Trieste. Lon. 14. 3. E. Lat. 45. 5. N. Pop. 846. H. 432. Bp. see. It was a considerable town in the time of the Romans, but now decayed. The harbour, or rather bay, 12 miles in circumference, is formed and protected by a chain of very pleasant hills; the entrance, however, is rather too narrow for large vessels. The town is surrounded with walls, has four gates, and a castle, which is situated towards the sea, on an eminence almost in the middle of the town. It possesses many antiquities, namely, an amphitheatre 366 feet long, 292 broad, and 72 feet high, with 145 arches, ranged in two lines; farther, nearly in the centre of the town, are the ruins of two temples.

Poland, p-t. Trumbull co. Ohio, on the Mahoning; 18 SE. Warren, 62 NW. Pittsburg, W. 283. Pop. 990. It contains a furnace, a forge, and other mills.

POLAND, country, Europe, bounded N. by the Baltic and Russia, S. by Walachia, Moldavia, and Hungary, W. by Germany and the Baltic. It comprised Great and Little Poland, Lithuania, Masovia, Podlachia, Little Russia, or Red Russia, Volhynia, Podolia, and the Ukraine; and was sub-divided into 31 palatinates. Sq. m. estimated at 284,000. Pop. about 15,000,000.

The partition of Poland between Russia, Austria, and Prussia, took place at three distinct epochs, viz. 1772, 1793, and 1795; and the result of the whole in 1735, was nearly as follows:

	Sq. m.	Pop.
To Russia	168,000	6,700,000
To Austria	64,000	4,300,000
To Prussia	52,000	3,700,000
	284,000	15,000,000

In 1815, further changes were made by the congress of Vienna, making the distribution of the country nearly as follows:

	Sq. m.	Pop.
To Russia	178,000	6,900,000
To Austria	30,000	3,500,000
To Prussia	29,000	1,800,000
Kingdom of Poland	47,000	2,800,000
	284,000	15,000,000

Chief towns. Warsaw, Dantzic, Lemberg, Cracow, Wilna, Brody, Kiev, Posen, Charkov, Mohilev, and Vitepsk.

Rivers. The Vistula, Bug, Niemen, Pregel, Dwina, Przypiec, Dnieper, and Dniester.

Face of the country, &c. The word Polen or Poland signifies a plain, a name well suited to the face of the country, which is almost everywhere level, and in many places marshy. The only great mountains are the Carpathians, forming the boundary between Poland and Hungary. Vegetation is a month later than in the same latitude in France; and the climate on account of its humidity and the exhalations from the marshes, is in many parts unhealthy. The soil is miserably cultivated, yet so productive that the annual export of corn is computed to average 4,000,000 English quarters. Other exports are hemp, flax, cattle, timber, wax, and honey.

Inhabitants, &c. The Poles were originally a tribe of Slavonians, and are among the most illiterate and least civilized nations of Europe. The Polish language is a dialect of the Slavonic, but the Latin is in general use in literary composition, and even in conversation among the higher ranks. There are universities at Cracow, Wilna, Warsaw, and Lemberg. The government of Poland was a monarchy, sometimes hereditary, and sometimes elective, limited by a diet. The constitution has been defined the government of a half a million of men of property, styled nobles, over 1,000,000 Jewish traders, and 13,000,000 slaves. The inhabitants are Catholics, members of the Greek church, Jews, Lutherans, and Unitarians. The Jews comprise the men of business of the country; the current money is chiefly in their hands, and a great proportion of the land is mortgaged to them.

Poland, km. comprising the central part of the preceding country, and consisting of the chief part of what, from 1807 to 1813, formed the duchy of Warsaw; bounded N. by East and West Prussia, E. by Russia, S. by Aust. Galicia, and W. by Pru. Posen. Its form approaches a square of nearly 200. Sq. miles 46,958. Pop. stated by Hassel in 1816, at 2,793,000; about 1-7th Jews. Pop. by another statement in 1818, 2,732,324; by another in 1821, 3,438,728. The number of Jews, in 1818, stated at 212,944.

It is divided into 8 palatinates, Cracow, Sandomir, Kalisch, Lublin, Plock, Masovia, Podlachia, and Augustow. Warsaw is the capital. The other towns are mostly small; the principal are Lublin, Kalisch, Plock, Sandomir, Augustow, and Siedlce. The rivers are the Vistula, Bug, Netz, Pilica, Nidow, Bsura, Wartha, Prosna, and San.

The face of the country is generally level; the soil naturally fertile, but miserably cultivated. The exports consists of corn and raw produce: there are few manufactures, except distilleries and tanneries. The inhabitants are more civilized than those of Lithuania, but less so than in Prussian Poland, where there is a larger mixture of Germans.

The government is a constitutional monarchy, vested in a viceroy appointed by the emperor of Russia, and in a senate of 30 members, 10 of whom are bishops; and a diet of 77 deputies. The revenue amounts to 900,000*l.* sterling.

Pomerania, pr. Prussia, bounded N. by the Baltic, E. by West Prussia, S. by West Prussia and Brandenburg, and W. by Mecklenburg; upwards of 200 miles long from E. to W. and from 30 to 80 broad. Lon. 12. 29. to 18. 2. E. Lat. 52. to 54. 44. N. Pop. 665,336. Sq. m. 12,349. It is divided into 3 governments, Stettin, Stralsund, and Coslin. Chief towns, Stettin, Stralsund, Stargard, Anclam, Colberg, Stolpe, Wolgast, and Coslin.

Pomerania consists almost entirely of a flat tract of country extending along the Baltic, and so low towards this sea, that it would be inundated, were it not protected by a range of sand hills and dikes. The soil is generally light; in some parts particularly near the sea, consisting of drifting sand; but on the banks of lakes and rivers, of a black, rich mould: the climate cold, often foggy, but generally healthy. The exports consist of corn, cattle, timber, wool, wax, and fish. Cattle and sheep are very numerous, and there are extensive woollen manufactures. The peasantry are generally in a state of vassalage, and the state of agriculture is backward.—The rivers are the Oder, Leba, Stolpe, Rega, Persante, Ucker, and Ihna. Almost one seventh part of this country formerly belonged to Sweden; of this, Stralsund was the capital; but it now belongs wholly to Prussia. The old divisions of Anterior or Hither Pomerania, and Hinder or Farther Pomerania, are now abolished. The former name was applied to the part lying on the west side of the Oder; the latter to the part lying on the east side.

Pomeranza, (Le), t. Tuscany; 5 S. Volterra.

Pomerelia, or Little Pomerania, district, Prussia, now forming a part of the province of Dantzic, bounded E. by the Baltic, E. by Prussia, S. by Poland, and W. by Pomerania; about 90 miles in length, and 50 in breadth. This country was formerly a part of the duchy of Pomerania, and was governed by its own princes, of the Pomeranian line. The principal places are Dantzic and Stargard.

Pomona, or Mainland, the principal island among the Orkneys, about 15 miles from the N. coast of Caithness. The form is very irregular, being intersected by a number of bays or lochs. The soil is very various; in some parts, especially towards the hills or high grounds, we meet with a mixture of cold clay and moss; near the shore it is generally of a sandy nature; rich black loam is also to be met with in some few places, especially near Kirkwall. They sow on it the only grain they have, a small kind of black oats, and a poor sort of bean alternately. Kirkwall is the capital. Pop. about 12,000. Sq. m. 212. Lon. 2. 50. W. Lat. 58. 54. N.

Pompeii, or Pompeia, ancient city, Italy; 12 SE. Naples. It was situated at the foot of Mount Vesuvius, and was buried, A.D. 79, at the same time with Herculaneum, by an eruption of that mountain. It had been almost forgotten, till about the middle of the 18th century, when it was discovered, and about one fourth of the city is now cleared. The volcanic matter covering it, consists chiefly of an accumulation of ashes. On entering the city the traveller finds himself in the midst of ancient buildings. The first objects that strike the attention are the quarters of a Roman legion, 2 theatres, a temple of Isis, &c. The streets are paved, but narrow; the houses small, some of 2, but generally of only 1 story; and on the whole, Pompeii has, in many respects, a strong resemblance to modern Italian towns.
